It was trimmed with shadow lace and was most awfully becoming to her. was most awfully becoming to her. While it's an old custom to wear white when introduced, vivid colors are somewhen introduced, vivid colors are sometimes fremendously becoming to the girls and so why not wear them? It's foolish to be bound too closely by custom. And the debutantes yesterday afternoon were both singularly happy in their choice of frocks, white and lace was just the right thing for Elise, and burnt orange exactly correct for Mary.

Of course, they both had quantities of flowers. It would be remarkable if there were not many, rather than rethere were not many, rather than re-markable that there always are, for every one feels the coming-out party is the time to show a girl what you think of her, and her parents, and grand-parents, and all the rest of the family; and, believe me, these two debutantes yesterday were about as popular as any whose teas I have attended so far.

HAVE you heard about the "Hour with Hans Kindler" that the junior auxiliary of St. Edmund's Home for Crippled Children is giving on Monday night of next week at the Bellevue-In with Hans Kindler" that the junior auxiliary of St. Edmund's Home for Crippled Children is giving on Monday night of next week at the Bellevue-Stratford? I think it will be very delightful. Mr. Kindler will play for an hour and then the room will be an hour and then the room will be converted into a dancing room, and the audience will spend the rest of the evening at that pastime. Have you ever been out to St. Edmund's Home? They have the darlingest little children there. Poor little lambs, who have lost a leg in an accident, or who were born crippled. They are the happiest lot.

I was there one day when they were all playing together, and the good sister in charge called them over to sing for me. One little fellow, whose back had been broken, came over on his crutches and sat there holding another little fellow, who had only one leg, on his week knee and they were all so gentle and heavy together. And how they fellow, who had only one leg, on his wee knee and they were all so gentle and happy together. And how they sang! It was a privilege to hear them. CPEAKING of Mrs. Bob Lesley reminds me of her pet charity, the foundling ayslum at Seventieth street and Wood'and avenue. The women on that board are giving a tea out at the form this afternoon. They are anxious to interest Philadelphians in the place where so many of the little ones who are to be future citizens are cared for and housed. The building is four or investories high and they have only a small freight elevator so that it has been necessary to carry the more than 200 small inmates under four up and down the stairs in order to get them out of deors. The women on the board, some of whom are Mrs. Robert Bicknell, Miss limite Rivinus and Mrs. John Sargent Newbold, are trying to raise the necessary amount to pay for an elevator in the institution.

I don't think they will have to wait very long to get it, once we all know of the real need. They have a lovely play-round at the back of the home with overlook are well be accessed.
