

INCHES FROM The Golden-Plated Rule

By Lillian Paschal Day

Showers of Gold

Funny about showers. Gold, praise or rainwater. People forget they're only showers. Think they're perpetual floods. Sure they'll last forever. Regular succession of cloudbursts. Sun smiles through a sky-eyebrow. He is grinning up his sleeve. He knows showers don't last. People ought to, but don't. The city of Paterson forgot it. Memory-lapse cost her $100,000,000. She was proud of her titles: "Silk City," "Lions of America," "Fate was spending orgy started. Now floss parted from new money. Silk was their idea of luxury. They would have it at any price. The higher the better. Paterson aimed to please. Obligingly she skirted the prices. The sprinkles of gold began. Then followed the cloudburst. The town went silk-crazy. Looms went up like mushrooms. Barbers and butchers set them up. Paid $2000, prewar cost, $300. Dollar silk quadrupled to $4. A thirty-cent hair ribbon sold for $2. "Value received?" A forgotten term. Fortune were made in a fortnight. He did not make a million in a month. Golden Rule was swallowed in gold.

Things You'll Love to Make

Embroidered Circles For Girdle

The girdles on the newest one-piece frocks tie in front. Instead of having the cord just tied around the waist, embroidered at regular intervals circles four or five inches in diameter. Make a large eyelet in the center of each, through which the cord is passed. Around the eyelets make flowers in French knots or in the new carpet embroidery. In bright colors. Use metal thread for the leaves and the two circular rows of stitching. These embroidered rings make stunning trimming for the frock, as well as affording a novel way of using the cord girdle.

HUMAN CURIOS

The Man Who Blew the Mississippi Bubble

John Law, one of the most strikingly unique figures in American history, secured an early start in his career of crime by being sentenced to death for a murder committed during a duel fought in England. Through the influence of friends, however, he escaped to Holland, where he drifted into employment in the Bank of Amsterdam, a connection from which he appears to have collected sufficient capital to finance a campaign of gambling which netted him the enormous sum of £100,000.

It was after this coup that Law suggested to the Duke of Orleans, regent for the young King Louis XV, the plan for a formation of a state bank with power to issue notes and accept deposits. It was from the success of this that there arose the idea for the Mississippi Co., an organization designed to exploit the entire territory of Louisiana. Two years later the management of the mint was handed over to Law's company and he was thus enabled to manipulate the coinage, as well as controlling the collection and disposal of the entire state taxation. For a while all went well. In fact, everything that the Scotchman touched appeared to turn to gold. Shares in the company, which initially purchased for $500, rose to

TODAY'S MYSTERY STORY

By PHILIP FRANCIS NOWLAN

Yesterday's Mystery Solution

THE mysterious visitor who stole the letter in the case of "The Invisible Thief," the visitor who called regularly on Robert Faulk, but whom he could not remember, was none other than the notblack man who made the rounds of the address in Faulk's building.

He did not remember him because he attached no importance to him. Like the business men out of town, he customarily dictated important letters, held confidential conversation over the phone, and talked to visitors on private matters while the notblack man stood by, looking on. This notblack man, like many others of his kind, had a businesslike taciturnity and a broad accent that resembled a muffled keener, understanding that his customers, condescending to "kid" him occasionally, ever suspected.

He had been polishing Faulk's shoes while the latter, talking to Travis, had slipped the securities into his desk drawer. While Faulk was out to dinner he had walked into the office and abstracted them. Then, with an afterthought of caution had rubbed the imprint of his palm on the glass desk-top with one of his shoe-shining cloths.

It was what conclusions you can draw from that, nor how you could trace them. They've disappeared as completely as Rimborne himself. Just what are you driving at? What do you propose to do next?

Can you tell how Harvey Hunt was positive there were fifty typists despite the fact that the initials in the lower left-hand corners of the letters might have been blind? How he expected to trace them? What he expected to learn from them and what motive he figured would make them talk?

The answer will appear tomorrow.

THE FIFTY TYPISTS

IT WAS in connection with a million-dollar bankruptcy case that Harvey Hunt solved the mystery of the fifty typists.

Rimborne & Co., a new firm in the city, had been doing a very large dry-goods jobbing business for ten months—that is to say, they had been buying heavily for ten months, and inasmuch as they had paid their bills promptly for the first eight months their creditors did not bother to investigate their channels of distribution.

On the tenth month Rimborne & Co.'s receipts of merchandise were particularly heavy, but there was nothing unusual about that. It was the period of the year when the shipments of the mills were heavy, and the goods had been ordered in advance at various periods.

But before the end of the tenth month, before the bills fell due, Rimborne & Co. simply disappeared.

Their warehouse remained. Their land remained, but there was nobody more surprised than he when as a result of the postoffice's inability to deliver their mail, the building was inspected and found absolutely empty. Rimborne & Co. had shipped out the unpaid-for merchandise to unknown destinations and had vanished.

There were some three hundred cred-

THE US ARMY TEACHES TRADES

In the Army you can learn to be a skilled man in any of a hundred trades—

You earn a good living while you're learning—

You have money in your pocket at the end of the month.

You get about a bit, see new places, meet new people—

And when you go back to civil life, you've got the special training that is in demand, the skill that will bring you more pay, a good job where you want it.

Adventures With a Purse

"IT IS a surprising thing," said Mabel reflectively, as she reached over and took another one of our favorite candies: "it is a surprising thing what you can do with a good-looking piece of ribbon." I listened attentively, remembering the little silk garments I am making for Christmas. "You take a comb for instance, and put some bits of really pretty ribbon on it, and just look at the difference and see how you can perk it up." And then I began to picture those little gifts of mine and how they could be improved by ribbon here and there. And the upshot of the whole matter is that I now tell you of some lovely two-color ribbons at a shop. The quality is excellent and the colors lovely. Just one bow of it would add wonders to a Christmas present you are making.

If you want to pay as much as $3.00 for some one's Christmas present, let me suggest something that I thought about the other day. There is one shop that is having a most interesting sale of soft little silk neckties—jersey silk, as I remember it—and in almost every color of the rainbow. There is the dark blue or brown, for instance, for the woman who wants to match her suit skirt, or there is the brightly colored green or purple for one who likes a touch of color creeping from the edge of her dress. But in any color the price is a real bargain, and I know that one would make a mighty nice Christmas gift.

These little brass bowls are lovely—dull, well-shaded little things, with a delicate tracery of artistic design adding to their richness. And their use? Well, one could use them for finger-bowls, and their rich color would please. Or one could buy one or two for ash receivers, and they would gleam with friendliness under the soft lamp light. Here are two uses to which they might be put. When you see them you may think of others. Their price is sixty-five cents each.

Embarrassing Moments

A Halt to Traffic

Crossing an alley I stepped on a matelone cover which had several small holes about the size of a quarter in it. My heel went into one of these small holes. I turned and twisted. An auto truck came up to turn in and still the heel stuck. A kindly old man came along and drew out his knife to pry my heel out and another man stopped to watch the operation.

A horse and wagon came down the alley and stopped, facing the auto truck, and there was a bit of good natured joking between the drivers, one of whom asked me how I preferred to be run over. In my embarrassment I pictured myself going on without the shoe, so that the wagon and truck might go on their way, and stammered, "Never mind, please, I'll—" when he interrupted me with:

"What d'ya think you'll do? Go along dragging the whole cover with your heel time there were more spectators, but a final boost freed the heel and left the leather cap in the hole. The kindly old man next procured that and presented it to me to be put back on, as though it were worth its weight in diamonds, while the auto honked and the driver cracked his whip over the back of his horse, speeding out of the alley with great pomp.

Women's Interests

Since the world war many girls of Brazil are turning from the thirteen and fourteen year-old marriages and are entering schools to fit themselves for business and the professions.

Thirty years ago Miss Cobden was fined $300 for acting as a member of the London County Council. Though regularly elected to the office, she was disqualified for "being a woman."

The Ribbon Sash

The sash of today makes us think always of the old maid aunt of the family. You know how, when Molly's children all go down with the measles and Molly herself is hurried off to the hospital, Aunt Louisa is the first person considered to fill the emergency. And how, when Sally's cool leaves just on the day when Sally is entertaining the bridge club, Aunt Louisa is called over to make the mayonnaise and the Bavarian cream.

Similarly, the sash nowadays leaves any trifling duties of its own to minister to bereaved parts of the gown. Thus, at the evening gown, the sash frequently performs the part expected of a train. This is particularly true of the normal little evening frock. Make this of crepe de chine, with long sleeves, and tie about the low waist line a two-inch wide ribbon. Then let one end of this sash dip on the floor and you have something for the country club dance.

Shorten the ends of the sash or remove it altogether and your crepe de chine frock with its long sleeves and elliptical neck line is perfectly good for collecting sufficient capital to finance a campaign of gambling which netted him the enormous sum of £100,000.

Perhaps the most decorative of all the sashes are the girdles made of silver or delicate tone ribbons, which are strewn with such dainty blooms as marguerites and rosebuds and forget-me-nots, and worn by the young girl on her party frock of tulle.

This isn't all. The sash for the other kind of occasion is now sustaining the same duties as does the chintz curtain in the gray walled room. It tightens up these summer daytime frocks which we are now affecting.
