Fears Loss of Individuality

"Our states, unless they bestly thems selves, will not prove indestructible, If we continue in the way we have been going for fifty years there is grave danger that we shall lose one of the elements of strength in our national life, namely, its political individuality, "I confess to you that it is difficult to say definitely what should be done in order to decentralize. The problem is not one to be discussed in detail. It is rather a school of political thought, a philosophy of life. The first step, therefore, in effecting the ends implied by my theme is to get the decentralization thinkers out in the open and deise a line of thought and action which ultimately will check the flow of all authority to Washington and bring back to the several states that part of it which can best be exercised by sub-divisions. We are drifting toward centralization because the people will it, or at least they do not check it. We shall drift back the other way when people are so minded. The problem is one of education." Scores of stenographers from the Cap-
