The Woman's

A Novel Shower

The Editor of Woman's Page:

Dear Madam—Again I come to you live a few suggestions for having a novel by shower for a bride out of our Sunday school class. It is our custom to live a shower for any girl that gets married out of our class. We are having it in our social room at church. Perhaps you can tell me a novel way to decyfate ard fix rur gifts.

Decorate your social room at the church with Japanese or silk parasols, hung upside down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper attached to and banging down from the celling Have showers of either ribbons or crepe paper at the hour named Dick stepped down from the veranda to simple letter.

Another way to present the gifts would be to have a child dressed all in blue with the word 'postman' written across his cap. Itle the gifts in an express waxon, and let him pull them in and deliver them to the guest of honor. To carry out the shower idea, he might wear a tiny raincoat or carry an open

DICK GRAHAM. Spencerville's rising young city attorney, had been burled in the opposition lands ide, although running well although of his ticket, and the strenuous campaign, topping a long per-lod of hard work had wern him down to a degree which made rest imperative.

"Tell you what, lick, his assissant, Jim Balley, had suggested, "any home town, down on Arinoke Island, forty miles off the Carolina rogest, is the most restful spot on carth. If you'll go down there, I'll write Elizabeth—my flancke, you know, one of the Haydens—and you'll see some real Southern hospitality."

Dick unfettered, deadly tired, had mentally decided that any kind of a change would be agreeable and accepted, warming a little at the friendly concern in Jim's eyes when he made the offer.

A week later the shallow draft sidewheeler Cape Beatrice threaded her tortuous way through the cyster-bedded sound to far Arinoke and discharged on to the strangiling pier a little freight and one lone passenger.

The girl's delicate eyebrows lifted in a way that puzzled Pick a bit. Then she smiled. "Jim deserves every plece of good fortune that comes his way," she declared, "but wait until you see my cousin. My aunt. I believe, is going to ask you to stay with them while you are here."

"Elizabeth! But — pardon me, we drove this morning."

Oh. I mean Jim's fiancee. That's why we all call my other cousin Both. You see, it's mixing naming girls after a grandmother. Elizabeth really expected to get back on the same bont you did, but in case she didn't, delegate! Beth and me to look out for you until she came. She lives with mother and me. And here we are!"

The following day Dick and Beth stood together on the windswept dock watching the Cape Beatrice as she ploughed her way toward them on her return trip. Elizabeth! But - pardon me, we

Doll Holds Eye of "Little Mother" As Tots Clamor for Xmas Sights

"Well this is a ten-year-old size,"

HERE was great weariness in the face of the little girl who led one, two, three, four younger children through the toy department of a big store on Market street. She was not more than twelve, but one handed down grown-up's coat and the worn high-heeled shoes labeled her instantly, not as the joyous particiation in the party but just as the tired little mother of it.

And then she spied the snow doll in the glass case. And she stopped. The
