Nancy Wynne Talks of the Morning Musicales and of the Second Opera Performance This Evening. She Suggests Earlier Dinners

WELL, we have been having some wonderful music of late, have we have can't be early tonight and see' if we can't be early tonight and hereafter.

JACKIE'S little friend Willie had a new sister and Jackie was much could not have a sister, too. Willie's little sister was with her mother in a lovely big room down at the hospital and Jackie thought a lot about it.

Well, one morning last week daddy came in and, taking Jackie by the hand, remarked in a funny kind of voice: "What do you think, the stork was here this morning and left us a brand new sister!" Jackie looked at him with round and wondering eyes of the morning and think about it and see' if we can't be early tonight and hereafter.

JACKIE'S little friend Willie had a new sister and Jackie was much could not have a sister, too. A ND tonight we have the second opera of the season, that is of the Metropolitan season at the Academy. It will be "Carmen," with Farrar and Martinelli, and promises to be exceedingly hellicant.

NANCY WYNNE. ceedingly brilliant.

The second meeting of the Opera Supper Club will be held after the per-formance, and for those who are in-terested I am in a position to tell you that arrangements have been made to have the tables in the foyer this time and not in the corridor, as last week.

I think if they do realize it they will perhaps have their dinners earlier, even at 6 o'clock if necessary, to let them reach the opera on time. It would be a good solution of the difficulty for opera and theatre parties both to have the dinner before the affair an hour to a half hour earlier than heretofore, or else confine the entertaining to after the opera or theatre.

I know a great many persons who go to theatre parties often have seen most of the things three or four times. and so they don't mind if they are late and miss a part of the show. But, you see, the other people who are not so fortunate as to have been invited often to the theatre are just a little anxious to see the play or the opera and, atter all, they have spent good sums for their seats and they should be able
