Schuck and Prisoner Came Here After Hiding Body in Marsh, Is Charge

WOLVERTON OPENS CASE Details of Brutal Crime Given After Completion of Jury Before Noon

Facts in Paul Murder and Trial of James

Victim—David S. Paul, aged Camden bank messenger. Defendant—Frank J. James, autotrick salesman, of Lawndale, N. J. Trial Judge—Justice Katzenbach of the Supreme Court, and Criminal Court Judge Kates.

David S. Paul, after he had been struck repeatedly on the head with a leaf from an automobile spring by Frank J. James and Raymond W. Schuck, pleaded for his life and begged to be taken to Cooper Hospital, promising to say that he had been attacked by bandits and found by James and Schuck.

Prosecutor Wolverton made this charge today in opening the commonwealth's case against James, at the second day of James' trial in Camden courthouse, for Paul's murder. This additional and brutal detail of the story of the murder had not been revealed by the prosecution in its preliminary statements concerning the crime.

Paul asked James and Schuck to take him to the Cooper Hospital, said Mr. Wolverton dramatically, "and promised them he would say that he had been held up at Delaware avenue and Market street, and that James and Schuck had found him and taken him to the hospital."

Instead of complying with his plea, the prosecutor declared, the two men drove with their victim toward the country. At an out-of-the-way spot, between Marlton pike and the Baird avenue bridge leading into Forrest Hill Park, the car was stopped.

Paul seems again to have recovered his senses," said the prosecutor, "and begged them to let him go, and said if they wanted the money to take it, but to let him go."

'SUBMARINE THIEF' CITY'S FLOODED WITH BOND BIDS

Only First Floors of German-town Homes Ransacked. Loot Obtained Is Small

ENTERS BY WINDOWS

The "submarine thief," so called by the police because he operates only on the first floor of houses entered, worked in the Germantown section last night, and ransacked twelve homes, all located within a small radius.

He worked several hours and secured only $87 in money, jewelry worth $115 and a fountain pen worth $2. In three of the twelve houses nothing was stolen. In every instance the thief obtained entrance by an unwatched window, or by forcing a window. Then he ransacked all rooms on the first floor of each house. No efforts to operate in the upstairs apartments were made.

Not a single sleeper was awakened by the thief and in every case first knowledge of the robberies came to the owners when they found a first-floor window opened at the time they came down stairs today.
