

MRS. WILSON ADVISES A NICE-LOOKING TABLE

This Counts as Much in a Good Meal as the Quality and Quantity of the Food—A Russian Service

By MRS. M. A. WILSON... Dear Mrs. Wilson—Will you please give me a few hints on correct table arrangements and service?

These little amenities of correct dining should be part of each household and part of the housewife's daily plan. To permit careless or indifferent manners at the table, or a haphazard method of table service, though one must do one's own work, is surely the way to bring embarrassment on oneself when you have guests.

Make it a rule to prepare the food, set the table and serve correctly. It will require but very few minutes longer and you will soon acquire it to the manner born; then adhere to this arrangement.

The table is usually laid by the following rules: For breakfast cover the table with a white cloth or table pad and then lay a clear white linen cloth.

For breakfast cover the table with a white cloth or table pad and then lay a clear white linen cloth. A centerpiece of ferns or flowers is always nice. Now on a nice tray always the percolator, the sugar, cream and butter coffee cups and saucers.

Arrange the service at each place as follows: A fruit spoon, cereal spoon, coffee spoon, butter knife, silver knife at the right-hand side of the place about one inch in from the edge of the table.

The table is laid with a white cloth and white linen table cloth, spotlessly clean. The dinner napkin should be about twenty-eight inches; it should be folded three times in the width.

MAKE YOUR OWN BAG

WHILE Christmas is not far away, it is still enough in the distance to have time to make gifts. And many of us are so busy that we cannot always have all our gifts finished weeks before the day.

Of course, there is really no end to the variety of beaded bags shown; but to make one of these is to long a piece of work to begin at this time.

Moire silk is seen a great deal, and these bags are extremely good-looking. They are set in the straight and also the rounded forms, and are placed into them.

It is a good idea not always to depend on a pattern. Try to get accustomed to cutting things like these for yourself. Take old cloth or soft paper, and see if you can't cut out one of these plaited bags.

Then shape your pattern to fit the frame as it nears the ends at each side, mark clearly above and then shape from the bottom up to the point where the frame ends.

Try a piece of paper eighteen or twenty inches wide by ten deep. Fold it through the middle on the length of it, then lay three plaits each side of the middle.

Some bags are made with a small round bottom, to which the bottom of the bag is sewed. A circular piece measuring four inches across is a good size.

Please Tell Me What to Do

Cannot Show Affection... Dear Cynthia—Kindly answer these questions for me as I would like to know what to do.

My greatest worry is that my mother believes that I don't love her and many times she would throw up to me that I'm her enemy.

My dear, start by always thinking pleasant thoughts and half your trouble will be conquered right in the beginning.

"T. B. P." Writes... Dear Cynthia—Some of the letters in your column recently have struck home with enthusiasm in the city who want to know how to get the real story.

It was a little over a year ago, incidentally, when some one offered to help make me less lonely through you.

Dear Cynthia—I am a young girl aged seventeen and even though I am not a girl of eighteen or nineteen, it seems as though I shall never get out with other girls and fellows.

TWILIGHT MAKES "THE KIDS" BEGIN TO THINK OF GHOSTS

When You Remember the Monsters That Lived in the Shadows of Your Childhood Home You're Glad You've Grown Up

THE street was almost dark, and the lights were beginning to show in some of the houses.

People were coming home from work from both directions, hurrying up the street or down the street, and going gaily into warm homes.

One of them looked up and down the street, where the arc lights, just spluttering on, made mysterious shadows under the trees.

He giggled in an embarrassed, apologetic tone. "Nothing," he replied, logically.

Those ghosts that infested the shadows of twilight in your childhood—weren't they terrible!

He stayed right behind the post, in the shadow of the big tree, until the street lights came on.

And then after that you didn't know when he'd jump out, or come crawling after you.

Sometimes you thought it was just the shadow of the big tree, but then it seemed to grow darker, or come nearer, or something, until you just couldn't stand it another minute; you had to go in and have somebody light the light inside.

Then there was a certain corner of the upstairs hall that you didn't trust any too much; it had a triangular shadow, partly on the ceiling, a colossal shadow.

THE HUSBAND HATER

By HAZEL DEVO BATCHELOR

Jean Northrup, who has been brought up in wealth, is suddenly left penniless by the death of her father.

Never in his life before had Mark Brand met so utterly disdainful a creature as this woman before him.

Looking at him defiantly, Jean said his mouth tightened, and then suddenly he laughed.

"What an epitaph it is!" he sneered. "To have your own way, aren't you? Well, now, we ought as well look at this thing fairly."

"Do you want to stay here in the city?" he asked.

"But don't you see how impossible that is? I can't stay here, my work is in the west."

"Marry you, marry you!" her tone was incredulous. And then she laughed, she threw back her head and laughed and laughed.

"Have you any money? I guess I'd better leave you some, and he counted out some bills which he left on the table.

"Be a sensible girl and don't act like a child," were his last admonishing words before he turned and went quivering with impotent fury.

I was talking to my son one afternoon. "John Henry," I said, "shall mamma buy a new hat for you?"

"No, mamma; I got enough to go on," he answered.

"If you don't know what to get to vary the monotony of the daily diet—try Ancre Cheese."
