THE GIRL WHO HAD A LIFE

THERE was once a girl who had a perfectly good life all her own. She was do not down about two days in succession with his rival. she used to sit down and worry about that life of hers. "What shall I do with it?" she would ask, over and over again. And the result was that she merely went en sitting and worrying and won-dering until her perfectly good life was all wasted.

"Jerry"? I agree with each one when they cx-press themselves in believing that "love a sacrifice"—the greater the sacrifice. he greater the love—but as you say, why "pick on the girls?" all wasted. There were two things that she needed—a sense of humor and some plain, ordinary, everyday common ny own life-it may help you to under-stand love's meaning. At the present time I am the bread-winner of the family-and why shouldn't I be?-my husband is up against it. In other words, he has no work and can find none that he can do on account of injuries received which are troubling him now, but that is no reason why we should pine and sigh and find the world is and a hundred or more like complaints. If he were able he would go out and provide for me. As long as he isn't, why shouldn't I do the same for him? I am young, healthy, and can provide chough for us to live on "pretty comfy." But "C. R." this is also an important part of the ifity-fity basis to which you did not heathy, and can provide chough for us to live on "pretty comfy." But "C. R." this is also an important part of the ifity-fity basis to which you did not refer. My husband has taken my place in the home. Keeps it clean-yes, "washes the dishes" and has a good dinner cooked for me when I came home in-stend. So you see, "C. R." and "Jerry." you still have a little further to book-in other words, be fair to both sides, and then As in our little family true love will rule-"sacrifice undying, but well rewarded by the loving sacrifice of "the other." "A WIFE." thrilled over it. "Why, if my thoughts are always pure and good." she exults, "I can never do anything really wrong." And common sense, standing, ignored and neglected just around the corner, smiles a resigned, contemptuous smile and remarks: "Why, of, course not, anybody knows that." There's the snub-nosed, freckled dreamer of sixteen who imagines him-
