WHAT Harvey Hunt explained in the case of "Two Crimes at Once,"

Last trip had been but a few days before he vanished, and he had returned from it much depressed.

The note briefly explained that he ns this:

tread of Pennsylvania Railroad stock.
The arrest of Botts at the instigation had bragged about the artistry of that erly arranged alibi.

But the pair figured that if she "beat brud on the other side of the railroad had not seen him pass, though a sound had not seen him pass, though a sound and husky laborer or two had. The nature of the Bairns operation, the doctors that he beat on the other side of the railroad had not seen him pass, though a sound and husky laborer or two had. The nature of the Bairns operation, the doctors of the ground, with the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation than that he had plunged into the rapids between the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation than that he had plunged into the rapids between the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation than the land plunged into the rapids between the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation than the beat on the other side of the railroad had not seen him pass, though a sound and husky laborer or two had. The nature of the ground, with the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation than the steep cliffs, offered no other explanation.

They had several weeks' start and the chase was hopeless. It was several years later that Hunt ran into the pair again. But that is another story, been worn. And more strange, the rights and lefts in each pair were dif-

Botts actually had a criminal record.

If he and the woman, who was his accomplice, of course, had merely waited for Dr. Bairns to accuse him of the swindle, and then Mrs. Weller had come forward with testimony to the effect that he had been in her apartment all evening, her veracity might be open to question.

the sweet or taking the bloom from the flower. A big bill, indeed—but it is no more than what we want—just love. Would you have children—hungry. would you have children hungry, clinging arms about your neck that only you can satisfy? Would you have an other of the man you love and you? Would you have one human being in the world whom none and nothing can turn from you—to whom you are per-fect and glorified?

Then you must pay—in drudgery, cometimes in health and strength. No sometimes in health and strength. No matter who you are or what your material possessions, you must, to be a mother, pay in relinquishment of many pleasures and enjoyments; pay in the shackles of responsibility, of worry, at times in the hideous torment of a tug of war with death.

The beggar fears no robbers and an empty heart has no concerns. With the real things there are no cut rates, no bargain counters. It is either emptiness, nothing—for nothing, or life, full and vibrant, at par.

Which shall it be? For me, I have made my choice. It may be a big bill, but happiness is a big order—and who will say it is not worth the price? (Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Co.)

Welcome—1921!

On this, our first business day of the new year, we welcome you, 1921, as a symbol of increased opportunities, a year of greater privileges, an era full of golden days of promise.

The business done in 1920 was the biggest in our history, away beyond anything we had ever looked for, thanks to our hundreds of thousands of customers, whom, with painstaking care, we have tried to serve.

We shall continue in 1921 the business principles and honesty of purpose that were the foundation stones upon which this business structure was reared.

The confidence of our patrons is an asset that we value above everything else.
