Bridgeport. Corn., San. 5 .- Panic milk peddler, on trial for Nott's murder, leaned over as he was passing Mrs. Ethel Hutchinson Nott, wife of the murdered man, and kissed her full on

With a scream Mrs. Nott staggered from her seat just as Deputy Sheriff Pasanella langed with his fist on young charge of first degree murder in con-nection with her husband's death, went into hysteries following Wade's kiss, "Take her out!" velled the crowd. Two deputy sheriffs lifted her in their arms and rushed her from the courtroom.

Court Officers Fight Back Crowds Court officers, attaches and attorneys fought valiantly several minutes in re-fought valiantly several minutes in re-straining the excited crowd. Grappling with persons of both sexes the defenders of the space allotted to the participants in the trial used their fists on the men and bodily threw back the women. It was some time before a semblance of order was restored and the court ordered the wood restored and the court ordered the room Although fighting manincally to reach the inclosure where the principals of the tragedy were, the mob apparently did not know its own intentions. The not know its own intentions. The spectators seemed to lose all control and simply wanted to be near the prin-

Recause it was the third fainting epell of the day, court was adjourned until tomorrow. An hour prior to the kissing episode, Mrs. Nott fainted when physican witnesses described the three physical wounds, several skull fractures gunshot wounds, several skull fractures and nineteen knife wounds in Nott's body. That time she was carried to the sheriff's office and revived.

The feature of this, the first day of evidence taking, was a demand for a ruling on the part of the prosecution on ruling on the part of the prosecution on the admission of a signed confession alleged to have been made by Wade, in which it was detailed that Wade went to the Nott home the morning of Au-gust 29, accompanied by J. E. Johns-ton, nineteen years old, at the request
