THE ARMHOLE IS MADE DOWN AT THE ELBOW

By CORINNE LOWE

This year it is anything to prove that the armhole is logically situated in the neighborhood of the elbow. The drooping shoulder line is undoubtedly a tribute to the omnipresent authority of the cape, and it is evidenced particularly in many of the wraps of the season. The effect is produced in the above evening wrap by wide silver-broadened ribbon drawn down over the sleeves of the gray velvet which makes the model. Collar and cuffs are of line fox. And let it be noted that not only the evening wraps, but many of the afternoon ones as well have enunciated the creed: "I believe in velvet." In this respect we are not following the lead of Paris, which has declared for the divo-wrap against the claims of velvet.

After a few preliminary experiments in conversation Jean found herself talking to Carol Baker as she had not talked to any one before in her life. Without betraying confidence, she poured out her new excitement, the change that had taken place among the people she had once known. "The such a feverish unrest, if you know what I mean," she explained. "The women don't seem to be satisfied with their husbands, they crave excitement. I don't understand it at all. It is the spirit of the times, my dear. Carol explained promptly. "Most women don't know what they want, they are confused, they are lost. It is a period of transition for women and they have lost their simplicity of outlook. A few years ago there were only two kinds of women, the work woman and the woman who was content to love some one and be loved. Now there are all kinds of women who work from the kind who have to, to the kind who take it up as a job so as to keep up with the times."

There was silence for a moment before Jean said to the maid who stood at the French clock on the mantelpiece "I hear that you are very happily married. You seem to have solved the problem for yourself, anyway."

Instant Postum never disturbs nerves. Coffee drinkers who change to Postum usually feel better. "There's a Reason"

Making More Money
"The Pretty Things"
That was the plaint of Betty Lynn. When, after a few months' sojourn in New York, she found that her slender earnings wouldn't permit her to buy the "pretty things" she wanted. "But what's the use?" I can't afford them and from the way that things are going now, it doesn't look as if I ever will be able to." So, more to kill time than anything else, she picked up a lottery vase which her immediate neighbor was using as a model in her drawing and commenced to "decorate" it with broad streaks of color.

Why, that's beautiful! was the exclamation that greeted her a few moments later, when the committee returned and saw the vase. "You've done all the right things. You've done what you take up for that sort of thing and leave the rest to the committee. Who don't mind striving to reach better money in this sort of thing if you handle it right. It's only a matter of getting a good location and then letting your artistic sense run loose. Why, that's a beauty!"

Two Minutes of Optimism
By HERMAN J. STICH

Don't Commit Time-i-cide
IS NOT the greatest miracle of them all—just time? Consider time. It has been said: "Time is money." This does not begin to do justice to time. Time is far more valuable than money, because if you have time you can usually get all the money you need (sometimes, all you want); but you may lose all the money in the world and it will not get you a single second more of time. Time is the basic raw material of everything. Given time, there is little you may not do. Without time, you can do nothing. Fortunately for all of us, in the realm of time, we find an ideal democracy. Here, all share fair, alike and equal. Plutocrat or pauper, incipient Mozart or organ grinder, corporation president or office boy—each receives the same share of Father Time's inexhaustible and indispensable gift—twenty-four hours each day. And time is one of the very few things in this world that is solely and incontrovertibly yours—to do with as you please, to handle or mishandle as you wish, to enjoy or destroy as you see fit. No one can steal your time but you. No one can waste your time but you. What you are and what you will be depends upon what you do with your time. No man ever gets so rich he can afford to lose time—in fact, the more affluent or influential he becomes the more he becomes a miser of minutes. Father Time is grateful for proper appreciation of his precious commodity—but he is relentless in his punishment of its abuse. Father Time accepts no I O U's for squandered seconds. He is more inexorable than the law itself. The man-killer frequently escapes the consequences of his act—the time-killer never does. He pays. Every day witnesses the metamorphosis of twenty-four hours into whatever you choose to transform them. They may be builded into happiness, health, culture, love, success and respect of your fellowmen—or they may be woven into the age-long story of a wasted heritage. Time is the makings—what the finished product will be is up to you. Make this a New Year's resolution you will not break: "I will not commit time-i-cide!"

hurry should force herself to eat heartily at that time. But for the average business woman, going without breakfast is a real mistake. If a couple of glasses of water, cool preferably, are taken immediately upon rising, it usually prepares the way to a satisfactory breakfast. Lunches should be simple and nourishing. Nor should dinner be taken when tired at night. A little rest first is really necessary.—Walter Camp, in Woman's Home Companion.
