Judge Owl's Burglar

CHAPTER V Judge Owl in a Fix

By DADDY

WHOO! Whoo! I've caught the burglar who has been sucking eggs, sooted Judge Owl. He clung tightly the tall of the creature he had grabbed as it crept through the hole in the henhouse door. The creature turned and jerked, but it couldn't get away from the grip of Judge Owl's claws.

"What is it?" cried D . F, for all they eculd see of the creature was its tall and Judge Owl's claws were covering mort of that.

"Is it a rat?" asked Peggy, studying the tall by the light of Billy's electric

"Whoo! Whoo! It is not a rat and t is not a cat," hooted Judge Owl. "I don't know what it is. I'll pull it out and we will take a look at it." Judge Owl jerked harder than ever but he found the creature just as strong as he was. He couldn't budge it an inch.

"Whoo! Whoo! I know how to fetch it" hoosed the judge, and stooping over he nipped the tip of the creature's tail in Judge Owl had been trying with sil his might to drag the creature from the hole and he ought to have been satisfied when it began to come out of its fed when it began to come out of its fed when it began to come out of its fed when it began to come out of its fed when it began to come out of its satisfied. He was scared. He took one look at the creature's reddish brown fur and wriggly body and then he began frantically to shove it back into the hole. Hiss. sa.ss! Help!" gasped Judge Owl, and his worried face showed he was much alarmed.

The creature was only half way out of the hole, but Judge Owl, had a tough job trying to hold it there. It squirmed and thrashed like a little fury. Billy picked up a stick and with this he helped Judge Owl push the creature back. Even then, the beast fought fercely, yielding only a step at a time. At last it was again inside the hole—all except its tail, and to that Judge Owl clung as if afraid that Judge Owl clung as if afraid and to that Judge Owl clung as if afraid to let it go.

"My, my, that was a narrow escape!"
the Judge gasped. "If that creature had ever got one shash at my throat, I would have been a gone owl."
"What is it?" asked Peggy, who had been looking on anxiously.
"It is Wee Wily Weasel," panted Judge Owl, still broathing hard after his hard strugglo with the creature. "He is the night prowling burgiar who has been sucking the eggs."
"Yes, I'm Wee Wily Weasel," murmured an angry voice on the other side of the door, "and I'm so mad that I'm going to sut the throat of every chicken in this hen house, and then I'm going to get you, Judge Owl. I'll fix you for alpeins my tail."
