

Adventures With a Purse
 How far ahead do you look? Would you be interested now in something that you probably would have no use for until then, and will probably have to pay more for if you wait? To be more definite, do you know what kind of tea spoons are? They are like long glass tubes with tiny spatula on the end of each—a sort of mustard spoon that has had its handle stretched. These tiny bowls of the spoons are generally colored, so that the effect as you see them through the lead tea glass is very nice. Well, one shop has these spoons or sippers in most any color you would want—green, old rose, a clear deep amber, and a light blue. They are specially priced at ten cents or $1 for a dozen.

It has been about a year now since I bought mine, and I thought then, and still do, that it is one of the prettiest and most graceful little lamps I have ever seen. At the time I paid $5.00 for mine, then later the price was raised to $12.50. But now there is one place where one may be purchased at the special price of $1. The base is of a rich yellow, slender and graceful, and made of china. The shade of yellow silk, with strips of bamboo running through it, is mushroom shaped. Of course my description does not do the lamp justice, but perhaps it is sufficiently vivid to give you some idea of the lamp. I'd like to have you stop and see it.

Buying things at the end of the season has this advantage. One can generally find the prices gratifyingly reduced. In the case of the colour portieres, as an example. The two side pieces and the valance, making a pretty door or window, can be bought, ready to hang, for $5.50 for the set. There are a number of colors, old rose, tan, mulberry, blue—probably the shade you would like for your living room. The colour is of a good heavy quality, and unquestionably should wear well. You also can buy it by the yard for $2.50 for fifty-inch width, or $1.25 for a narrower width.

HUMAN CURIOS
 The "American Aquatic"
 Ask any schoolboy the basis for Benjamin Franklin's fame and the odds are that he will reply that he was the author of "Poor Richard's Almanac" or that he discovered electricity or that he was minister to France. These are probably the most famous events in the life of Franklin—but there was something else for which he was even better known during his younger days, his total abstinence at a time when practically every one drank heavily.

To the argument that porter was a necessary article of diet, Franklin would reply that the strength furnished could be only in proportion to the solid portion of the barley dissolved in the drink and that there was much more flour in a penny loaf than there was in a number of glasses of beer, ale or porter. Consequently, if he ate this loaf and drank a pint of water he would develop more strength than from a pint of beer.
