

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

"UP A TREE" By DADDY CHAPTER III Cooney Raccoon SOME creature was coming up the tree in which the birds were roosting. Fuzzy could hear it clawing the wood as it climbed. She could hear it sniffing like a dog following the track of something it was hunting.

Billy, keeping watch over the sleeping birds, also heard the clawing and the sniffing. He quietly took his electric torch from his pocket. "Sniff! Sniff! The creature drew nearer. There seemed no doubt it was after the birds. Billy pressed the button on his torch. The ray of light suddenly shot forth. It caught by surprise the animal drawing itself upon a limb below the children.

Billy took his finger from the button and the light went out as swiftly as it had come on. Its flash had been like a streak of lightning and possibly that is what the animal thought it to be. Billy thrust the torch into Peggy's hands. His armel swung around her, and in a moment he was unfastening the lasso with which he had bound her to the limb when she went to roost with the birds. She thought it was to let her escape from the animal by climbing farther up the tree. But Billy had another idea. "Flash on the light when I judge you," he whispered.

"There there wasn't a sound in the darkness. The animal was wondering what made that flash—if it really was lightning. Then, after a while, the animal made up its mind that the flash was lightning, and again it climbed toward the sleeping birds. Sniff! Sniff! Scratch! Scratch! On it came. And as it came it chuckled to itself. "Whopper! I smell supper! Nice birds waiting in the tree for me. Cooney Raccoon will feast tonight."

Billy pushed the button of the torch. Out flashed the light, and there, staring right into it was a big raccoon. Cooney Raccoon was astonished. Never before had lightning been so close to him. He never had it glared at him alone, blinding his eyes. Cooney Raccoon blinked and gasped. And as he blinked and gasped, something hit him on the shoulder; something snatched him from the limb to which he had been clinging. Cooney Raccoon thought he had been struck by a thunderbolt. He thought he was a dead don and that he was being thrown through the air on his way to the coast's happy hunting grounds.

But Cooney Raccoon hadn't been struck by a thunderbolt and he wasn't dead. He had been hit by the nose of Billy's lasso, and he was now dangling in the air at the end of that lasso. "I've got him!" whispered Billy to Peggy. The sky rained and lightning lit up the trees. "What are you going to do with him, now that you've caught him?" asked Peggy.

"Now going to keep him hanging there until morning, and then maybe I'll give him to the red-headed boy at the farm-house," said Billy, tying the lasso to a limb of the tree. Billy had caught Cooney Raccoon not to prove around at night catching the poor sleepy birds. Peggy thought that was a very nice Cooney Raccoon right, and she flashed the light to see what he was doing. He was swinging back and forth as if he were a pendulum. Billy was doing the end of the lasso, a much puzzled count. He didn't know what happened to him, and he didn't know how to get him. In fact, he couldn't do anything but get him down. In fact, he couldn't do anything but get him down.

As Peggy's flash lighted up Cooney Raccoon, her quick ears heard a rustling in the bottom of the tree. Billy's sharp eyes caught a glimpse of something dark climbing the tree. "Jimmy!" cried Billy. "Turn off the light. Did you see that?" "Now what do you suppose the something dark is?" "And why is Billy alarmed?" "You think it is another foe of the birds?" "If you were telling the story, what did you say about the something dark in the tree?" "And what would you have it do?"

HUMAN CURIOS

Amassador or Ambassador? Charles Genevieve Louis Auguste d'Éon, Timothee d'Éon de Beaumont was with the imposing name of one of the most amazing characters of history. Later known under the title of "Chastler d'Éon," who, according to all contemporary historians, appears to have been the Julian Eltinge of the eighteenth century.

Born at Tomarre, France, in 1728, d'Éon attracted attention at an early age by his remarkable talent for impersonating persons of either sex. Learning of his specialty, Louis XV invited the young "scholar" to court and to the most august of assemblies. He was to have a free hand in connection with the solution of the many problems of d'Éon, which were constantly cropping up. Within a short time he was able to clear up—proving most efficient and Louis, as a reward, bestowed upon him a commission in the army. Thereupon d'Éon had a most interesting and exciting career. For a fortnight or so d'Éon would be dashing and daring, fearless and devil-may-care. Then he would mysteriously disappear and, in his absence, there would be a great deal of talk about a delicately beautiful woman who by the exercise of her charms, could solve any problem that presented itself. d'Éon was through a matter coup that d'Éon, as a man, standing as ambassador to the court of the Empress Elizabeth at Moscow and shortly afterward, during the absence of an ambassador, the emperor appeared with a new friend who was no other than the cheater, d'Éon.

After numerous successes, both in France and in England, d'Éon grew too old to play the double role and retired without giving any clue to "his" real history. Records of the fact that the cheater was a super-ego, but silent on the question of "his" real sex.

ROSES ARE USED TO TRIM THIS FROCK

By CORINNE LOWE No matter how young or how old we be, we are all suffering this year from rose fever. These flowers appear on all manner of tulle and lace and taffeta dancing frocks, and, as the trimming for evening wraps, nothing makes quite so charming a frame for the face.

One of the most delightful wraps that has been seen in New York is the copy of an imported model designed for the extremely young. This is a rose velvet cape with a deep hood outlined with roses in such a manner that when worn the countenance looks as if grown by Mr. Burbank himself.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

Their Day Off By LYDIA LION ROBERTS "Good-by, dears, be good children for Grandma. Yes, I'll bring some candy; for us. Don't forget to practice, Hob; and please return the library book Dick Goodby, everybody," and Barbara Allen ran down the steps and hurried for the train.

"You are right on time, Harvey," she smiled, as a tall, gray-eyed man eagerly met her in the station. "Today I can have you for a whole afternoon all to myself. I don't know how I should stand life otherwise, for business claims most of your time usually, and the father and the children demand the rest of it."

"It is very flattering to think you prize my society so highly," replied her husband, looking with fond pride at the dainty, fair-haired little woman at his side. "Here we are in the palace of thrills, and we are lucky today, for these are good seats," said Barbara, as they settled themselves in the theatre.

Next Complete Novelle—"Their Crystal Anniversary" Adventures With a Purse NOW for a nice ingenuity, a situation that calls for a fine spirit of resourcefulness, a situation that must be met, and met in the satisfaction of all. For today finds me with a spirit—both venturing—or rather with a spirit—both with physical limitations. For adventures are done—yet behind the humble seeker at home with their hand in their pocket, the grip. But I am not to be thus overruled by mere physical limitations. I shall adventure. I shall adventure. I shall adventure.

Things You'll Love to Make

When you look over your summer wardrobe, see if you haven't a soft, flat straw hat that you do not intend to wear. Make up a number of the straw or FLOWER BASKET out of it. Wire the inner and outer edges of the brim. Bend up the straw on the inside of the brim and form the handle. Flowers or other design may be painted on the straw or bunches of flowers sewed at each side of the handle. Place a jar or bowl of water in the center of the hat. The FLOWER BASKET is ready to receive and delightfully display a pretty bunch of posies.

Making More Money "Just Milk" If you happen to ask Mrs. Margaret Carter, of Wakefield, Mass., how she made enough money to buy the large and prosperous farm over which she presides with all the pride of the successful agriculturist, she will almost certainly reply with the two monosyllables: "Just milk."
