FOOTBALL RULES COMMITTEE NOT LIKELY TO REVOLUTIONIZE GAME WITH SWEEPING RULE CHANGES

THE view taken by most of the football experts in A Philadelphia is that while the football rules committee at its annual meeting in March will consider more suggestions than usual, little change will be made in the code as it stands today. The main topic at this year's meeting will be the forward pass. A number of conches. among them Nat Poe, who assists Bill Moper at Princeton, believe that a pass blocked behind the line should

Both in theory and in practice it has been the idea of those who conceive forward pass plays to get the receiver in a position where he will not be interfered with in taking the toss. In order to do this, most of the eligible men are usually sent in one direction, while the man to whom the mass is to be made will go another. This means that to mask a play properly the passer as well as the receiver is virtually on his own as far as assistance from his temminates is concerned. Conse quently, if a pass would become a free ball, if blocked, the chances would be all in favor of the defense making

It doesn't take a very heavy line of reasoning to show that if any play gives the defense a better chance to recover than the offense the play won't be used to any great extent. In other words such a rule virtually would eliminate the pass and the game would revert to its

It isn't likely that the committee would do anything so revolutionary as to put this cule into effect, but if it did there would be a great hije and cry raised from every part of the country, particularly the Middle West, where e pass has been developed higher, on the average, than in guy other section of the country.

A PHILADELPHIAN, who is not a member of the cules committee, but who is in close touch with the factball attestion, gave this as his opinion: When it's over, however, I think you'll find the rules next full will be just about the same as they were last season. No radical changes are needed and few mont them.

The Middies Have Started Something

VALE men are all "het up" over the claim of the A Navy that the middles' swimming team is better than the Blue natators. According to reports from New Haven. Yale wants to arrange a dual meet and show the young admirals that they are all wrong. They claim further that the Navy refuses. At any rate, when the Navy made their announcement of alleged superiority over Yale they started something.

As we get it the Navy doesn't claim to be better in every event. For example, the middles confess their weakness in the distance plunge.

The plunge is one even in the swimming program in which, in spite of their showing in other lines, the midshipmen can never hope to excel, and the reason is simply that the human mountain type of man, found to be the kind required for a really good performance in this line, is too heavy in comparison with his height to pass the physical tests for entrance to the Navai Academy. The distance plunge, in fact, is one of the few athletic events in which men of this type excel. The winners of it are in nearly every instance men who would width of the pool, the one who does it in the shortest time is the winner. A contestant cannot aid his progress in any way after the start. The only position element is in the first drive, and the negative elements all relate to keeping the momentum applied as directly to the course

In the first place the laws of physics establish the fact that weight is an element in momentum, and this has to do with the positive factor of proficiency in the plunge. The negative elements are even more important, and directly account for the fact that good plungers are almost always of the heavy-set type.

The longer the plunger is under water after his drive at the stact and the deeper his descent, the more he is retarded. The fat man does not go as deep as a man of any other build, so that the curve of his course under water is flatter, and there is less misdirection of the initial impulse from his stout legs. He is under water n shorter time, reaches the surface with less loss of momentum, and, finally, when he is on the surface a smaller proportion of his body is exposed to the resistance of the water than in the case of a man of any other build.

THE Naval Academy water polo team is nearly a "youngster" aggregation, and is led by one. that being the term applied to members of the third class, now in its second year at the Academy. There have been a few instances of second classmen named as team captoins at the Academy, but Higgins is the first third classians to be an honored.
