

PHILHARMONIC CLOSES SUCCESSFUL SEASON

Fifth Concert of the Series Given Before Immense Audience in Academy of Music

The Philharmonic Society of Philadelphia closed its third season with a concert at the Academy of Music last evening before an audience that filled the house from the pit to the loftiest seats in the amphitheatre.

The program contained two novelties, a Caprice entitled "Reminiscences of the Caucasus," by the late Gregory Kannerstein, of this city, and an interesting Nocturne by Martucci.

Mr. Kannerstein's composition is in fully orchestrated, although its debt to the beginning of the Caucasus is admitted. Nevertheless, it is a composition well worth hearing.

THE DAILY NOVELLETTE

A Happy Reunion

Jack Harding had two hours to wait before his train was due to leave. He was sauntering along with the crowd when he felt a heavy hand on his shoulder, and turning around, he was exceedingly surprised to greet his old friend and college chum, Dick Harrington.

Things You'll Love to Make

Pleated Satin Leaves

A most effective trimming, and a little cut, are these PICOTED SATIN LEAVES. Baste together two pieces of satin, back to back. Mark out the leaves—three inches, each, three inches long. Have them pleated. Tack them loosely around your turban, overlapping them here and there.

Jack with a quizzical smile, and a merry twinkle in his dark eyes. "After I heard that Jean and you were engaged, I expected every day to receive an invitation to the wedding, and for some time I scanned the daily papers where Jack Harding had succumbed to the charms of the beautiful Miss Jean Wetherbee, only daughter of the Hon. and Mrs. Douglas Grant Wetherbee."

"Father called me into his office one morning and told me I must pack at once and sail for England. It was of the utmost importance. The business had to be attended to at once. Father was not able to make the trip. I was to remain away at least three months, and then go to Paris for several weeks. I tried in vain to persuade father to send me to the States. He was not to be moved. He had been for years in his employ. There was nothing left for me to do but pack and leave on the next boat for Liverpool."

"I had just time to attend to these details and write a hurried note of regret to Jean's home to be delivered to her on her arrival. I was not so busy but I found time to write every day to Jean, but all my letters were returned to me unopened. This made me feel very down-hearted, as I had explained everything, if Jean had only been reasonable and read my letters. It was just five months to a day when I returned to the States."

Jack paused and hastily looking at his watch exclaimed: "Well, Dick, it has got to be good-by. I have just time to make my train." Dick grasped Jack's arm and with a firm but kindly voice exclaimed: "Do you suppose I have found you to lose you so soon? You are not going on that train. You are going home with me. I want you to see Elsie again. You know Jean and Elsie used to be the dearest of friends. I want you to see my new home and how happy we are. I know Elsie will be delighted to meet an old friend," said Dick hurriedly, as he saw Jack was about to decline.

After a few more urgent appeals Jack was convinced. Dick telephoned from his office to Elsie he was to bring home an old friend to dinner.

Dick stopped his car at what Jack thought the most beautiful house on the street. Jack was made to feel right at home by the delightful greetings of Elsie, who came out to meet them, looking up so dainty and fair. Jack thought how fortune always seemed to smile on his old friend, Dick, while his thoughts were cut short, as he was being ushered into a large charmingly arranged living room. But who was the woman by the piano in white, a vision of loveliness? Hearing the approaching footsteps and animated voices, the lady turned. Their eyes met. Then voices rang out simultaneously, "Jack! I 'Jan!"

Mrs. Elsie made a hurried excuse to return to the culinary department, closely followed by Dick. In less than six months there was added another beautiful suburban home presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Harding, who are just as happy as the "Harringtons."

One morning a year later Dick, meeting Jack on the street, stopped to inquire "How is Mrs. Jack Harding?" Jack, his handsome face wreathed with smiles, joyfully exclaimed, "She is very well and so is little Jack, Jr."

There's Authority for these Statements. From physicians, dietitians and nutrition experts the nation over come enthusiastic statements attesting the health-importance of prunes in the daily diet. If you would see how essential prunes are to your physical well-being, read these: "I believe I am conferring a lasting favor on my patients in urging a more liberal use of such natural food-medicines as prunes. They are rich in nutritive, laxative and mineral elements. This much is certain: there would be less indigestion, less constipation and the ills that follow in their train, if people ate more prunes." —from an eminent medical consultant whose advice on diet has helped countless patients to better health and longer life. "The craving for sweets, exhibited in most children and many adults, is a natural demand on the part of the system for a needed food. In using dried fruit [such as prunes] we obtain not only the nutritive value of the sugar, but whatever other hygienic or medicinal value they may have by virtue of the salts and organic acids found in them. Remember, too, that prunes especially are rich in tonic iron." —from a nutrition expert whose investigations have won for him a nation-wide reputation as an authority on food values. —and here, if you will, are two more enthusiastic statements that show what domestic scientists, chefs and culinary experts think of prunes—the finest, most versatile and most economical of all fruit-foods. Read them and judge for yourself: "Whether used by themselves instead of fresh or preserved fruit, or as the basis of wondrous desserts, pastry and other dishes, prunes offer a tasteful and economical way of securing variety in the daily fare. The food value of a pound of dried fruit is, of course, much greater than the same quantity of fresh fruit. And, just now, when economy is such a factor to the housewife, the high food value of prunes places them among the reasonable [and always seasonable] articles of diet." —from a nationally-known domestic scientist to whom thousands of housewives look for practical help and kitchen guidance. "It is high time that prunes came in for their 'just desserts.' Prunes will occupy a more important place on hotel menus from now on—and I, for one, am glad of it. They are a good, natural food, to begin with; easy to handle in the kitchen, and adaptable to a wide range of uses." —from a chef whose culinary genius is responsible for many luscious, wholesome dishes now famous in America and abroad.
