Mistress Colfax, the stately mistress sauce or grave of this beautiful home, that lies about wenty-five miles as the crow flies from he railrond station, is a real mistress f a home; she has many of the dainty napuerisms that recall the days of plender in the South that have gone by. An aristocrat who holds herself alcof from the rush of the modern day, the is an adent at the art of cooking, and while she relegated most of this work to Aunt Benjan, she still supervises and oversees and that the menus knon the plantation.

Aunt Beulah is a papil of Mrs. Co. fax, and she surely is a credit to her mistress' teachings. And while modern methods, in spite of all their ofthey still have many of the old-
