The criminologist covertly studied them and could find no difference between them.

Then the man, who was just finishing his meal, took the little pot of coffee at his elbow, and, in all serenity, poured it, not into his cup, but on the tablecloth beyond it. Hunt leaped to his feet to avoid the steaming flood which poured over the edge of the table; but with virtually the same movement he whipped out a set of manacles and snapped them on the fellow's wrists.

The criminologist covertly studied them and could find no difference between them and could find no difference between them.

Choice of words shows itself even on such informal occasions as that of his says Mr. Brooks.
