Lievellyn Barry is living in New York most of the time now. I can see him now, when as a little girl I used to go to Rittenhouse Square to play, walking up Walnut street and into the club, always wearing brown clothes and always a brown derby hat. The gallery of the old house is the same as in former days, and the room that was used as a sort of ariary is still there and the old-fashioned carved marble mantels. It was a beautiful old home—some fifty years ago.

there. I hope you are going on Friday high of this week, as I think it will really be very interesting and besides the Chinese Famine Fund is a worthy cause. Mr. Harding, too, has appealed B. Nawkirk. us all to belp it along.

RE you going up to the Musical A Art Club, at 1911 Ranstead street, this afternoon? You know the as-Women Writers are to give a tea for Frances Starr there, and I hear a great many persons have been invited. Miss Starr is quite fascinating to talk to star is quite fascinating to talk to and has. I think, grown even prettier than last year.

The Charlotte Cushman Club is to have a tea this week too, on Friday, and it is for all the stars who took part in the benefit given last week at the Walnut Street Theatre. It will be quite wonderful to meet Wilson and Hopper and Frances Starr and Guy Bates Post and Hal Forde and all the lest of them, won't it? Certainly I have never known such generous people as actors. There last week it was not enough for Francis Wilson and Miss Starr to appear and entertain the people, but they cach gave two hundred and firty dollars for an engraving of Ada Reban which was auctioned off by de Wolf Hopper at the benefit. They gave the engraving jointly to the Cushman Club after paying that large sum for it. Besides having the late Miss Rehan's signature, it also had John Drew's (for Mr. Drew came all the way from New York to open the benefit you know) and all the other Becam's signature, it also had John Drew's (for Mr. Drew came all the way from New York to open the benefit you know) and all the other actors and actresses who took part in the afternoon.
