Republicans to Get Larger Postmasterhips, but Must Qualify for Jobs

HARDING BACKS PRINCIPLE

By a Staff Correspondent
Washington, March 18.—President Harding is about to take the lid off postmaster appointments. The Republican party will not only get larger postmasterhips, but it will also get the right to put in its own men, where possible, under straight party service regulations.

The new "wide-open" policy will be applied to the days of postmaster appointments. The Republican party will not only get larger postmasterhips, but it will also get the right to put in its own men, where possible, under straight party service regulations.

Such, according to excellent authority, is to be the handling of the problem of the postmaster appointments. The Republican party will not only get larger postmasterhips, but it will also get the right to put in its own men, where possible, under straight party service regulations.

the civil service principle, as is Postmaster General Hays. Within the week the President told a Republican senator he thought it would be the "most serious mistake the Republican party ever made" to remove all civil service restrictions from the postoffice. Hays and many members of Congress agree with him.
