DONOVAN'S HURLERS FAIL TO SHOW FORM

By SPENCER HALL

Gainesville, Fla., March 18.—Nick Altrock, the world famous Washington comedian, is in the heat of baseball fame. His touring for the White Sox last in their Phillips was a success, and his act on the side lines with the Senators has caused a plan for him to tour with the club. Nick Altrock is an outfielder and a good pitcher. He was with the National League from 1908 to 1912, and the World's Fair in 1913, and the Chicago White Sox.

Altrock's idea of being a baseball player is to make a team a real baseball team with Washington in the first place. He has been invited to play with the Phillips and has accepted the offer.

But yesterday in the game between the Phillips and the Washington Yankies, Nick struck his head in an encounter of that sort of mauling of the others, but he didn't quite get in that encounter. He missed it by a fraction.

PLAYS FIRST.—A soloist to nine soloists as a vocal soloist, Nick Altrock and Ralph Miller crashed into singles, the former pulling up a second on the latter's foul to left. Jack Miller came up next and on the second half of the single hit a sliding liner toward right field. It landed in for a triple.

And it was just then that a three-bagger hit a triple. Nick sprang into the air and stopped the ball with his gloved hand. As soon as he floated back to earth he touched first base, doubling Ralph Miller, thus cut the bases. Tom Wightman and Wightman was ruled off.

If the play had been a little slower and Wightman had got a bigger lead off the keystone bag, Nick would have been able to beat him to second and he may have made a triple play himself. At least he had the chance to do it, but he played it safe and let Tom Wightman in on the play.

Hurling Is Poor.—The Phillips pitchers did not seem to have hearts, and many times last evening's game. To begin with, Jim Ring went along very well for four innings, but then he went up to the mound again to his own fault. He allowed two runs to be scored off his delivery by Mac Keane.

The Senators veteran got on best both times by making what were scored as hits, but they weren't really hits and would not have been anything more than outs or errors on a good pitcher.

So after all Ring showed up rather well. He used his fades to fair advantage, but for the most part, as much as he tried to come to pitch, the Senators' efforts to pound the ball hard and then took advantage of it.

Jimmy Keenan, the diminutive left-hander who was caught like a fish by Tom Pugh, Brown and Terre Haute of the Three I League, was in doctor during the fifth, sixth and seventh innings.

Tried Too Hard.—Keenan seemed to see good success against minor leaguers on his minor leagues, so he took this occasion to try out the conqueror of Millville, N. J.

Jimmy, like many other young hurlers, tried too hard. He went to our manager on the first one St. Patrick's Day as he had done on August 1st, but he didn't do any better. While he was trying to pound the ball hard and then took advantage of it.

Keenan capped his effort by hitting three bases against the Phillips, but he was content with a couple of infielders and a base hit by Gould, gave Washington two runs and brought the count 5 to 1 in favor of the Phillips.

Keenan got to the eighth and eighth, but the game was over at that time. A home run and four runs came to pass, the score reads three more runs and the final 10-2 loss. Keenan intended to let Keenan catch the last of the game, but he took his rest after the seventh and Keenan finished.

While Keenan's showing was not that good, he did not do any worse than he did, but he was going wild. He is a one-man show, and it is evident that he is not a steady performer, but the fact is he is extremely popular among

Greasy Neale Comes To Terms With Phils

Gainesville, Fla., March 18.—Greasy Neale, who was traded to the Phillips with Jimmy Ring by the Cincinnati club for Eppie Rixey, will join the training squadron here at once. President Baker of the Phils, wired Manager Donovan that he had come to terms with Neale, who was a bulldog. Neale wanted his contract with the Phillips to terminate September 1, so that he could take on his work as football coach in Washington and Jefferson. Last fall Neale turned a country editor for Marquette College. Neale is an outfielder and a good pitcher. He was with Pat Moran when the Reds won the National League pennant, and the world's championship from the Chicago White Sox.

He probably will do better in time.

Cause is Off.—Rod Cather didn't show much. He is capable of being a real pitcher, and Dawson expects him to come through and is a bit of a question. He is probably the best with the Phillips, and he is certainly a pitcher who needs assistance; however, he didn't even himself out, and as the Washington club seemed to have on their swaying jackets, Rod was elated immediately.

Rod Donovan gave Henry Gandy second base, but said that his position would still again today. If Briony continues to play as he has been, he is certain to be a favorite with the Phillips.

Art Fletcher, who went to St. Louis to his brother's funeral, is expected back today. It is likely that Fred Merle will report today or tomorrow.

The final game of the Phillips series with the Washington club was scheduled for 3 o'clock this afternoon. The game leaves for Tampa where they will remain.

Scraps About Scrappers.

Rotting Morris.—After his second game of the season, Morris was not doing any better than his first, which was not good. Morris is a good pitcher, but he has not been able to get his control under control.

He has agreed to President Will Baker's terms and will join Donavan's squad immediately.

Lake Charles, La., March 18.—Though he appeared before them in secret in this neighborhood night, the boxmen of the Cardinals the Athletics have suffered a discreet silence as to the cause of Louis Feustel, trainer and devotee of Man o' War, the greatest racehorse in America. The turf has ever known. The Jockey Club admitted yesterday that Feustel had attended a star meet at the post and take his station within a short distance of the barrier, so that he may see everything that happens at the post and for the first furlong or more of the race.

Batting Order Changed.

The original batting order banned to the mound in the fourth inning, Mack pulled first baseman Griffith out and sent catcher Johnny Walker to first, Griffith's inability to hit the ball has been the team.

Had St. Louis put a right-hander instead of a left-hander in the game at the time, Frank Brazil would undoubtedly have been sent to first. Brazil's enthusiasm and plain hitting skill has been a decided asset to the team, losing the hot-hitting youth is sure to get a chance.

Batting Order Changed.

The original batting order banned to the mound in the fourth inning, Mack pulled first baseman Griffith out and sent catcher Johnny Walker to first, Griffith's inability to hit the ball has been the team.

Jimmy Dyer is the biggest kind of sneeze in the game. Jimmy stepped to the microphone five times and hit two singles and a double and received a pass. That's the kind of a lead-off man Mack wants.

Catcher Ralph Perkins is too valuable with the stick to be placed down at the tail of a batting order, so he has been moved to the front.

Mack's quick response to the losing streak has been to change two initial positions. There is a chance that he may change a place in the outfield, Frank Welch is the only garden performer that has been connecting with the ball with regularity.

The Athletics are losing because they are not hitting the ball or fielding well. The Mack's batted away the game last Sunday, but the Athletics batted in and those away the game yesterday. They lost yesterday, 6 to 3, when the game was really a setup for them.

Shaky Defense.

This is concrete evidence of shabby erratic defense, and Mack must strengthen the fielding gaps to regain his winning stride.

Last Sunday and Monday's shortstop was like a sieve, through which the Cardinals' batsmen were able to pass yesterday. The Athletics' defense was unimpressive, though there appeared no good reason why the incident should have been published broadcast unless the powers had cause for complaint against the trainer. The implied stigma has set tongues wagging and all sorts of gossip and rumors as to the cause of the action have been launched.
