

MRS. WILSON GETS RECIPE FOR NEW KITCHEN BOUQUET

Reader Tells How She Makes Good Flavoring and Coloring for Soups—A Good Fruit Salad Dressing

By MRS. M. A. WILSON (Copyright, 1921, by Mrs. M. A. Wilson. All rights reserved.)

A REQUEST for kitchen bouquet from an interested housewife has led another woman who likes to spend her time in experimenting to send to this corner a recipe all her own for a liquid bouquet.

The bouquet that I had in mind is the old style faggot of herbs that is used up from the little bundle of soup herbs usually purchased at the grocery store. To make this bouquet open and divide into four parts a bunch of soap herbs. Now add one-quarter cup of salt, cut the length of the carrot. Thread one onion on a string and tie the bundle. Dry in a warm place and store in a fruit jar until needed.

Dear Mrs. Wilson—I have always been interested in all kinds of recipes. Now, in reading the paper this evening, I see some one has asked for a recipe for making kitchen bouquet. I do not know that the recipe has been copyrighted, for I have the original one and been in possession of it for more years than I care to remember. I have made it and been successful. I will write it for you, and you will know what to do about the affair without injury to any one.

MRS. GEO. H. GRUBB. Kitchen Bouquet

Take a cup of granulated sugar, put it in an iron saucpan over an even fire and stir it around until it is a rich golden brown. This is the only part requiring great care, as it can be burnt beyond use in a second. When the desired shade is secured, add two cups of cold water and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Then put in a sliced carrot, an onion, a stalk of celery, a good-sized pinch of sweet marjoram, thyme and any other savory herb you may have on hand. Add a good-sized pinch of salt and a dash of cayenne pepper. In all boil until the vegetables are in shreds. Then take it from the stove and strain it carefully and bottle it for use. It should be of the consistency of thin cream and will keep indefinitely.

This bouquet is used for flavoring and coloring stock, soups, gravies and sauces. The making of home-made flavoring to give palatableness and savoriness to viands, need not entail much labor.

For cakes, puddings and sauces, many new combinations may be used. Lemon and vanilla is an old colonial idea, just as is orange and lemon. Try lemon flavoring with peach, cherry, apricot and mocha. Orange with raspberry, pineapple, nutmeg and cinnamon.

The French housewife has a dainty and delicate way of flavoring her cakes that is a source of wonder and speculation to her friends. She bakes the cakes in the usual manner and when they are cold and ready for being, she paints the surface of the cake with the desired flavoring, using a small camel-hair brush. Oftentimes she uses two or more flavors on one cake. The icing is then spread and both the icing and the cake are flavored with the same. You will find out how delicious it can be. If John likes raspberry, flavor one-half of the cake with this and balance with another flavor.

When making fruit salad dressing, an indescribably good and delicate flavoring that will bring out the flavors of the fruits used in the salad can be made as follows:

One cup of sugar. Two-thirds cup of water. Five level tablespoons of corn starch. Juice of one large lemon. Juice of one medium-sized orange. Stir to dissolve the starch and sugar and then bring to a boil and cook for three minutes. Now add the yolk of egg and beat hard. Fold in the stiffly beaten white of egg and remove from the fire. Let cool and then add:

Four drops of vanilla. Four drops of lemon extract. Three drops of nutmeg extract. Two drops of cinnamon.

Beat and then add one-half cup of whipped cream or marshmallow whip and serve.

Use a small medicine dropper for measuring the extracts; this not only prevents over-flavoring, but also stops waste.

Blended flavors are all delicious in fruit cups, sherbets and fruit cocktails.

Fruit Cup Place in a large punch bowl One small can of crushed pineapple. Three bananas, sliced. Juice of one-half dozen oranges. Two pints of water. One package of powdered sugar. One-half teaspoon of lemon extract. One teaspoon of orange extract. One teaspoon of cherry extract. Two tablespoons of vanilla extract.

Let stand for one hour to blend and then stir well. Add her. How stupid! Why this was his night at lodge! And rain or pleasant weather Mr. Bobb always attended meetings with unfailing regularity. As she picked up the receiver again she regretted that she had not been there all evening!

When she had recovered sufficiently she called his office number, but with a vague doubt for down in her heart she knew that no business, however important, could keep him at work until this hour.

"Main 0000 doesn't answer," came the crisp voice of the operator. "But, honey, you have all your clothes on!"

"Distrust came to stay as Mrs. Bobb off the lights and sat in the shadow of the curtained window to await the vagaries of the return."

Surely there must have been some truth in Mrs. Haastings' remarks, she reflected. Plain to be seen it was only the kindness of one friend to another in letting her know about the deceit.

Mrs. Bobb was having a gay time in the city while his poor wife snatched a much-needed rest. She had learned of his treachery just in time.

Anger grew hotter and hotter, as with clenched hands she prepared the home-coming speech for Bobb. However, as time wore on her mood changed, and there was a sorrowful satisfaction in feeling that she was a neglected wife, deceived and mistreated.

As the half clock dolefully chimed the hour of 1 in imagination she arrived at the conclusion of the divorce trial. A lump arose in her throat as she pictured her sorrowful exit from the courtroom surrounded by sympathetic friends and the object of compassionate glances of judges, jury and onlookers, while the remorseful Bobb sat with his head bent in shame.

When at 1:30 there was still no sign of the truant husband, Mrs. Bobb finally dragged herself up the stairs and opened the bedroom door with a heavy heart and burst of unrestrained weeping. However, when her eyes rested upon the bed she stared fascinated. Fully dressed, except for collar and tie, with shoes on the white coverlet, lay Mr. Bobb peacefully sleeping.

With a bound she was over to his head again and again. "What's the row? What's the row?"

One quart bottle of carbonated water. One quart of crushed ice, and serve.

So many dainty sherbets can be made and as they require very little work, they should be part of the dietaries that are served for Sundays and holidays at little home affairs.

Standard Recipe Soak one package of gelatin in a pint of cold water for one-half hour. Then add two and one-half cups of powdered sugar and heat slowly to the boiling point. Strain into a bowl and add:

Juice of three lemons. One small can of shredded pineapple. Juice of two oranges. Two tablespoons of vanilla extract. One teaspoon of pineapple extract. One-half teaspoon of nutmeg. One-quarter teaspoon of cinnamon.

Three pints of water. Mix and freeze in the usual manner. A blended sirup to use over fruit-cocktails: Place in a fruit jar

Two cups of powdered sugar. One teaspoon of vanilla extract. Grated rind of one-half orange. Juice of three lemons. Two cups of water.

Fasten the lid and shake well. Let stand for two days. Place in the ice-box and use as needed. This is delicious over cold rice puddings, cup custards and brown betty.

MRS. WILSON'S ANSWERS

Dear Mrs. Wilson—Please tell me how to roll jelly-roll cake without breaking it. B. L.

Bring a towel out of hot water very dry and then spread on the table and turn the cake on this towel. Roll lightly; overbaking will also cause this trouble.

Dear Mrs. Wilson—Would you kindly advise me how to keep raisins from sinking to the bottom when baking a cake. Mrs. Y. A. U.

Do not mix the raisins with the cake batter. After the batter is in the pan just press the raisins in place. Do not push too far into the mixture, as the rising dough will distribute them.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

These Husbands By GEORGIA HARRIS

Mrs. Bobb surveyed the unlighted house with suspicious eyes and tight-closed lips and, upon finding the back door locked, drew forth her latch key with as much vengeance as an angry warrior drawing his sword from the scabbard.

"Nine o'clock and no Bobb," she muttered angrily, as she switched on the kitchen light. "This is very strange!" She stopped suddenly and threw up her hands in dismay.

"What a sight greeted her! Dishes—dishes—dishes—even to her Dreaded china, filled the sink. Stale bread, burnt chops and egg shells orange and brown, were piled up on the table. The appearance of a village grocery store, for it was everything from eggs to soup cans and catsup bottles to hair tonic and shoe polish. Mrs. Bobb raised a wretched sigh as she suddenly thought of Bobb's last letter to her.

"Getting to be a regular housekeeper, kissing the tiny bald spot on his head every night, never go out—hope you are having a good time."

"Good time, indeed!" sniffed Mrs. Bobb, fairly bristling with indignation, as she strutted into the dining room. Here another sight confronted her and she looked about the room in consternation. Newspapers were strewn everywhere, one of her cut-glass bowls had been used for an ash tray, an evil-looking pipe rested brazenly upon one of her lace centerpieces, and, worst of all, the room was filled with the odor of stale tobacco. A forbidden privilege, smoking in the house, had been violated.

So perturbed was her state of mind that she had not the faintest reason for coming home. After a moment of reflection, however, she decided that things looked very serious, for the important fact stood out clearly. She had returned home unexpectedly and Bobb was not to be found. Considering that his letters stated very emphatically that all his evenings were spent at home things looked very suspicious.

In spite of this she tried to take an optimistic view of the situation, as she sat gingerly on the edge of a dusty chair. After all, she mused, she had been foolish to spoil her hard-earned vacation just because that horrid Mrs. Haastings had insinuated such mean things. Women could be so catty when talking about other women's husbands. Perhaps she had misinterpreted the fact that all his evenings were spent at home things looked very suspicious.

When mother's surprised voice told her that Bobb had not been over that evening, and in the same breath wanted to know the reason for his unexpected return to the city, Mrs. Bobb found a ready excuse in sweetest of voices, but she hung up the receiver with vehemence, as suspicion began to take root again.

She sat with impatient tapping of feet until a brilliant thought came to her.
