Jim said this absolutely without ran-cor, he had no intention of hurting his wife, but he was being franker with Clarissa than he ever had before. She rasped, stared at him a moment and then burst into tears. Frances would have scorned this feminine weakness, but Clarissa had always found it very effi-caclous in the past. Jim was always full of contrition and eager to make amends. But tonight as she crited storm-ily into her handkerchlef Jim made no effort to apologize. Frances had done her work well.
