

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

JUDGE OWL'S SECRETS
By DADDY

Drummer Robbie Robbin

"ONCE upon a time Robbie Robbin took a trip away up to the northern woods," said Judge Owl, beginning his evening story. "There he had a fine time, hunting and playing in the trackless forests."

"After a while, however, Robbie Robbin grew lonesome. He had always lived near the homes of humans, and he missed seeing boys and girls and men and women. Therefore, how glad he was when one day he came upon a little cabin in the woods. In this cabin was a man cooking his supper. Robbie Robbin was so happy that he burst into song."

"The man heard the song, and he came rushing to the window. He was just as glad to see Robbie Robbin as Robbie Robbin was to see him."

"The man showed just how pleased he was by throwing Robbie Robbin a feast of crumbs. Robbie paid for the feast by singing his sweetest songs. He and the woodsman became great friends and Robbie prebbed every night on a tree outside the cabin door."

"The nights in the great woods were very scary. Wildcats prowled among the trees, and wolves howled dimly along the shores of the lake. Robbie Robbin slept with one eye open in fear of the wildcats, while the howls of the wolves gave him the creeps."

"The woodsman threw out crumbs every evening so Robbie Robbin would find breakfast waiting when he awoke at dawn. One night the woodsman, in scattering the crumbs, happened to throw some of them on an overturned dishpan. Robbie found the crumbs on the dishpan in the morning, and started to pick them up. Rat-a-tat-tat! went his back on the pan."

"Out of bed jumped the woodsman, rushing to the door and glaring about. Robbie Robbin flew away in surprise, but soon came back to finish picking up the crumbs on the pan. Rat-a-tat-tat! went his back on the tin. The woodsman glared at Robbie Robbin and at the pan, and then he burst into a great laugh. 'Why, it is only the robin,' he cried."

"The woodsman thought it was a great joke on him to be awakened that way. 'I'll use this drummer robin for an alarm clock,' he said to himself, and so he did. Every night he left crumbs on the pan, and every morning Robbie Robbin drummed in picking them up. Rat-a-tat-tat! And out of bed the woodsman jumped to begin his day's tasks."

"There came a moonlight night when the howls of the wolves drew nearer to the cabin. Robbie Robbin heard them, and slept only by fits and starts. The sound was of animals creeping through the trees. Glancing into the shadows Robbie Robbin saw what looked like points of fire—dozens of them, all in pairs. He knew the points of fire were the glaring eyes of animals. Then a long gray streak crawled across a part of the moonlight. It was a wolf."

"In a moment other wolves appeared in the moonlight. The woods seemed to be alive with them. They were creeping toward the open door of the cabin. Robbie Robbin feared they were going to attack the woodsman as he slept and tear him to pieces."

"Robbie Robbin shrieked a warning—a warning that caused the wolves to pause for a moment. But the warning didn't rouse the sleeping woodsman, and the wolves crept forward again."

"Robbie Robbin was in despair. What could he do to save his friend? Then Robbie Robbin caught sight of the dishpan glittering in the moonlight. The dishpan was the woodsman's alarm clock. He might hear that even if he didn't hear Robbie Robbin's shrieks."

"The wolves were near the pan, but Robbie Robbin heaved a startled doze to it. Rat-a-tat-tat! rat-a-tat-tat! Robbie Robbin drummed as he had never drummed before. Rat-a-tat-tat! rat-a-tat-tat!"

"The wolves halted in alarm. The woodsman jumped out of bed and rushed to the door. There in the moonlight he saw the snaking wolves—dozens of them, eyes to attack him. Slam! The woodsman threw the door shut. He grabbed his gun and poked it into the window. Bang! bang! bang! he shot three wolves before they could flee to the woods, and the others rushed away in a panic. And that is the end, except that the grateful woodsman fed Robbie Robbin all the crumbs Robbie could hold."

"Tomorrow I will tell you about Robbie Robbin and the Magic Worm."
