

PERSHING CHEERED FOR LOYALTY PLEA

General Who Led U. S. Troops Against Germans Speaks at Patriotic Meetings

U. S. TIRED OF PROPAGANDA

All-American Day was brought to a fitting conclusion by All-American Night. With big patriotic meetings in the Metropolitan Opera House and the Academy of Music and a big street parade on Broad street, Philadelphia yesterday demonstrated that patriotism and loyalty to the constitution of the United States were still supreme.

The meetings were addressed by men of prominence in the city, state and nation who urged that the deathknell be sounded without delay to movements organized to effect disloyalty.

Tired of Propaganda

General Pershing was called to the fullest account and said foreigners should not be permitted to use this country for the purpose of foreign intrigue. He declared that America was tired of foreign propaganda.

when the women wearing gold stars entered. They walked in a body down the center aisle. As they entered the door some one shouted "Here are the Gold Stars!" Instantly every man and woman in the house arose and remained standing until the little band of women had taken places reserved for them in the orchestra directly in front of the stage.

A few seconds later the nurses, some in their white uniforms and cheerfulness in their white uniforms and red-lined caps. They, too, were applauded. W. Franklin Kendrick, who presided, paid a tribute to the mothers of soldiers and to the nurses before introducing the Rev. F. W. Woolson, who delivered the invocation.

General Pershing was escorted to his place immediately after the prayer. The band played and the crowd cheered as the general greeted Mr. Kendrick, former President Roosevelt, sister of Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of President Roosevelt, the first speaker.

for the Constitution, for the men who framed this Government and for this Government itself. It means love and respect for the rights of every freeman, love and respect for the home and a high, keen sense of duty and respect for the truth.

one of Chestnut Street's most interesting shops is that of Macdonald & Campbell, 1334-36 Chestnut Street. Good quality and excellent workmanship characterize the men's clothes and furnishings sold at this store. The man who knows how to dress knows that he is certain of finding what he wants at Macdonald & Campbell's.

Delora's Spans

IT'S really worth while, you know, to give careful attention to the smaller details of dress. It seems to me that such attention is even more important in a man's case than in a woman's. The difference between a suit and a custom-made shirt is easily recognizable to the man who has worn both. He knows that a shirt made to his individual measurement fits better, is more comfortable, possesses such merits as good workmanship and excellent wearing quality (for the material is of fine quality). Macdonald & Campbell, 1334-36 Chestnut Street, have earned quite a reputation among men who know what it means to be comfortably dressed and whose shirts are which give their patrons complete satisfaction in the department devoted to unbuttoned shirts, as well, indeed, as in all other departments.

One of the most delightful things in the world is the realization that some one has been really thoughtful of you. Think, for instance, of the day that you waved farewell from the crowded deck of the liner bound for the other side. You felt very much alone as the ship moved out of the harbor, but when you sought your cabin and found there a wonderful steamer-hampier filled with gorgeous, colorful luscious fruits which some one had been so thoughtful as to send you from the store of Henry R. Halliwell & Son, Broad Street below Chestnut, well, no words could express just what you felt. Halliwell's Ben Voyage Hamper and Basket are specially packed to last and to be enjoyed to the very end of the trip. They guarantee perfect delivery to any Atlantic port.
