

WATCHMAN SHOT; MYSTERY IN CASE

One Theory Is Man Was Fired on in Mistake for Trespasser

OTHER INVOLVES AUTOISTS

John Deviney, watchman, was found badly wounded at Thomas road and Wisnickenko avenue early this morning, and may have been shot in mistake for a highwayman.

Joseph Felski, a patrolman attached to the Chestnut Hill police station, was summoned after the watchman had been shot, says Deviney was wounded by a shot from an employee of the Andorra Nurseries.

Chief of Police Bisher, of Springfield township, reported Deviney was shot when he stepped on a lawn with two women, all of whom he arrested.

According to Bisher's story, William Lawson, an employee of the nurseries, was driving a motorcar on duty in the morning. He took a sawed-off shotgun and left his house.

In the nursery he was assisted by a man whom he could not identify. Thinking he was a trespasser, he fired. He knew he had hit the man when he turned and limped off.

According to Bisher's story Deviney was taken to a hospital in the morning and was kept in the motorcar containing the man and woman, who were all interviewed.

Deviney was taken to Chestnut Hill hospital. He is in a serious condition from the wound in his hip. He is thought to have lain on the street for an hour, and during this time he was weakened by the loss of much blood. His home is at 1414 City Lane.

Confesses Elwell Killing

Harris' Story Is Doubted

New York, April 9.—The "Mrs. Fairchild" makes sweeping denial when interviewed by detectives.

The detectives made their errand very plain to the woman in question. It might be said that she had anticipated their visit for the wording of some of the newspaper stories from Buffalo had indicated that Harris had identified a published picture of her as that of "Mrs. Fairchild."

Consequently, when the detectives came to her home this woman was properly indignant. She was indignant at the suggestion that she had done anything wrong, and on second thought decided to let them into her apartment and give them a piece of her mind. The detectives returned to headquarters with ringing ears, but the woman said that if ever a "sweeping denial" had been made by anybody, the woman they had been sent to see, April 9.—(By A. P.)—Although Roy Harris, who says he took part in the murder of Joseph P. Elwell in New York last June, has been accused of normal mentalities by all present, opinion here persists in the belief that he is a notorious seerker.

Harris will be taken to New York this afternoon or tomorrow morning where he will be given certain tests which, the police say, must either prove or disprove his sanity.

One inconsistency in the story Harris has told is that he described the woman he says hired him to help in the crime as a blonde, while the woman whose photograph he identified has dark hair.

ROV HARRIS

Arrested on another charge in Buffalo, Harris started the police by declaring he helped kill Joseph Rowan Elwell in New York last June. His story is being investigated.

"Mrs. Fairchild" Makes Sweeping Denial When Interviewed by Detectives

HARRIS' STORY IS DOUBTED

New York, April 9.—The "Mrs. Fairchild" makes sweeping denial when interviewed by detectives.

ELWELL IN STOKES CASE

Efforts Made to Connect Mrs. Stokes With Shadowy Visitors

New York, April 9.—(By A. P.)—Mrs. Stokes, who is being sued for divorce by her millionaire husband, W. E. D. Stokes, husband, characterized him in court today as a "senseless sleuth," seeking to link his young wife first with the Elwell mystery and then with the Stillman scandal.

Part of the portion was confined by the lawyer to the aged millionaire. He admitted for one thing that his detectives endeavored to fit keys found in her desk to the Elwell home, to determine if she had been one of Mr. Elwell's shadowy visitors. They admitted further that he "recognized" a newspaper photograph of Mrs. Florence H. Leeds as a "friend of Mrs. Stokes."

What Martin W. Littleton, Mrs. Stokes' lawyer, charged was that Mrs. Stokes visited legal representatives of Mrs. Stillman in an effort to have his wife impugned as one of the banker's companions.

When Mrs. Stokes was asked to identify the photographs, she refused to do so. She said she did not know any of the people named.

The meeting was called by the Allied Building Trades Council, a locally known "Education of Waste in the Building Industry."

When Mr. Wiggins was called to speak he said: "I fear if I make any remarks tonight I will be accused of antagonism in the minds of the workers against contractors instead of discussing the elimination of waste."

WANTS BOARD OVER HEAD OF SCHOOLS

Joseph W. Catharine, Member, Gives Views to Schoolmen and Is Answered

SUPERMAN CALLED FOR

Joseph W. Catharine, member of the Board of Education, declared today that he believed Philadelphia's superintendent of schools should be subordinated to the school board.

Mr. Catharine presided at a general meeting of the schoolmen's week session, at Penn. to discuss "The Superintendent as Administrator." Other prominent speakers failed to agree with several of his theories.

"Education is a state function," was one of the ideas he advanced. "The state has failed miserably in the performance of this function," he continued, "and that is why Pennsylvania ranks No. 21 among the states in its educational work."

Mr. Catharine said he believed the superintendent of schools should be elected for a term of four years. He did not advocate, however, giving him extraordinary powers.

"Wants Board to Be Supreme

"While I favor the enlargement of the powers of the superintendent, yet the Board of Education is the body in which the people have delegated their powers in running the schools, and the board should be supreme. The superintendent should be a pedagogical expert."

W. L. Engelhardt, associate professor of educational administration in the Teachers' College, New York, said one must be a superintendent to be a good superintendent.

"A study of terms of office of superintendents," said Professor Engelhardt, "shows that the superintendents of the country have been in their positions on an average of three and four-tenths years. That is to say, they are getting through just at a time when they are becoming most useful to their school boards."

"A good superintendent ought to have the game; he ought to be loyal to his profession," he said. "He should be a straight-thinking philosophy of education."

Prof. Engelhardt said he disagreed with Mr. Catharine in the function of the superintendent. The speaker said he considered it deplorable that school superintendents should be willing to relinquish their rights of initiative or administration. "The superintendent should be the supreme executive," he said, "the board only the advisory body. Any superintendent who is willing to have it otherwise is disloyal to his profession."

John W. Withers, formerly superintendent of schools of St. Louis, and at present dean of the school of education of New York University, said the job of superintendent of schools is an anxious and unstable one; that the superintendent is never certain whether he is going to be permitted to continue to hold his job, even if he has made good in it. "The educational administrator," he said, "must have failed to 'sell' themselves to the school board."

Dr. Thomas Moore, of Frankford High School, today addressed schoolmen at a conference at College Hill concerning secondary schools. He urged the establishment of the "right school program," asking that more loyalty be given in the choosing of subjects and courses. He said too many superintendents are not the normal pupil and not enough to the super-normal. Students, he said, need real advisers for teachers, not simply ones who call the roll.

Advice From Dr. Broune

Tentative conviction with open minds as well as considered ones, says Dr. Edwin C. Broune, new superintendent of schools.

Speaking at the closing session of the three-day meeting that has marked the opening of the Pennsylvania Museum today, Dr. Broune urged that condition of mind for all school teachers.
