Pennsylvania Association Is Told People Need More Real Information

MANUFACTURERS MEETING

Opinion is fairly general that building will increase largely after war reaches normal.

It is only opinion that the man who builds this spring will build at the low cost of 1921.

Suspect Caught at Corner Where Money Was to Be Delivered

DEATH THREAT IN MISSIVE

"Jimmy" Bardonny, thirty-two years old, of Rose street above Erie avenue, was arrested at 11 o'clock last night at Rose street and Rising Sun lane, as a Black Hand suspect.

A letter received Monday by Samuel Vattari, who conducts a poolroom at Rose street and Rising Sun lane, threatened him with death if he did not deliver $1000 to a masked man at the corner in front of his poolroom at midnight last night.

When City Hall detectives arrested Bardonny at the corner named in the letter one hour before midnight, they found a loaded revolver in his belt and saw him throw away a black leather mask which was recovered.

Bardonny was taken to the Germantown station and later to the station and today sits in the Magistrate's Prison at the Twenty-second street and Hunting Park avenue station without bail for a further hearing April 20.

The man said he had been out at work for two months. He was formerly employed at the Mutual Steel Works. He said he was married and had two children.

Electric lights and American flags will be the principal decorations.

Officers of the Knights of Columbus, Home of the City of Philadelphia, which is the corporation owner of the organization which will hold title to the property, will sign papers of settlement at noon tomorrow. Members of the order will be welcome in the building during the demonstration.

Automobile Bandits Hold Up Lone Pedestrian in Hancock Street

Haiting a pedestrian last night on Hancock street below Girard avenue, two automobile bandits robbed him of $3 in cash and an overcoat.

The victim is Hugh J. Boyce, of 125 West Allen street. He told the police that he saw standing at the curb a touring car with two men seated in the front.

As he came alongside, Boyce was ordered to raise his hands and make no outcry. Just to emphasize the point, one of the men thrust a revolver in front of Boyce's nose while the driver relieved Boyce of his cash and coat.

THE SCIENTIFICALLY BUILT WATCH

A Watch or a Bracelet— which do you buy?

A woman does not buy a bracelet when she wants a watch. Yet, that is really what thousands of keen and experienced women buyers are doing unknowingly every day. And it is not their fault.

Ladies' wrist-watches are fashionable and they are always going to be fashionable. A lady does not buy a wrist-watch to take the place of a bracelet. She purchases a wrist-watch to tell her the time. And a wrist-watch that is always "going wrong," "stopping," or that spends most of its life upon the repair bench—that kind of a watch is neither beautiful nor useful—it is an expensive luxury.

Alas, there are scores of thousands of ladies' wrist-watches hiding their worthlessness in bureau drawers, knock-knack and jewel boxes because their owners discovered they were made merely to look at. And the majority of these watches bear foreign names. But as they were sold at such "low" prices, much lower than a tiny Waltham for instance, their owners thought that they were saving money.

A watch is bought upon "faith". And there is not an article sold wherein and whereof we can be so much deceived as in a watch. It is not the jeweler's fault. The demand for reliable, fine watches is greater than the supply. If he sells foreign watches he cannot take them to pieces to see if they are put together "right." He has no means of testing the pedigree of the different "parts." He, too, buys upon faith. He gets the blame when the "works" go wrong, not the maker who lives four thousand miles away.

There are ladies who may be reading this advertisement who own tiny, exquisite looking wrist-watches that simply will not "go" or keep time. They have sent them to the leading jewelers in their town, but the trouble cannot seemingly be put right. Why is this?

There are two reasons: one, that the watch was sold at a price which forbade fine workmanship and materials. Two, that the watch lacked standardization, which is essential in tiny wrist-watches if they are to keep continuous and dependable time.

And you cannot purchase a dependable wrist-watch except at a relatively increasing price as the size of the watch decreases. In other words, the smaller the watch the greater the cost. Errors of workmanship can exist in, say, a watch of medium size, that would be disastrous in a tiny watch. The "works" of the tiny watch must be perfect even to the fraction of a human hair. For instance:

When the dial of a ladies' wrist-watch gets below the size of a twenty-five cent piece, the cost of such a watch mounts rapidly; and when the dial decreases to the size of a dime, the cost has increased at least four to five times as much.

The smaller the watch, the greater the cost. That is, if the watch was made to keep dependable time. And a small ladies' wrist-watch is rarely dependable if it lacks standardization. The fame, reliability and worth of the Waltham Watch has been built upon this undeniable fact. The tiniest ladies' wrist-watch made on this continent is a Waltham; although its dial is even smaller than a dime, it keeps the same dependable time as the larger Waltham gentlemen's watch, known all over the world for its accuracy and reliability.

And the reason this tiniest of ladies' wrist-watches keeps the time "day in and year out," is because it is standardized. It is a tiny, but perfect reproduction of the highest grade, larger Waltham Watch. Every part, every jewel, wheel and pinion-bearing is perfection itself because of exact standardized reduction in size. Just as you see a star reflected in a dewdrop—so in these exquisite, tiny, perfect time-pieces you have beauty, plus a lifelong service, which is the only reason why you desire to own and to buy a wrist-watch.

Do not be misled by "lower prices" or "just as good," or high sounding foreign names when you go to buy your wrist-watch. No lady desires a watch that will soon be hidden away among dusted trinkets, or that will cost her a small fortune in upkeep.

The more tiny the watch, the more it will cost you; but a beautiful, small wrist-watch is a prized possession indeed, when you can depend upon it. The name of Waltham upon the dial is an assurance of integrity in workmanship, of dependability, and true value for what you pay for it. It will profit you to insist that your wrist-watch be a Waltham.
