That was the decree proclaimed by various and sundry modistes of the city when the news came from foreign quarters as to the decisions in other cities. "Perhaps—just perhaps—skirts will be longer next fall. But just now—well, there isn't any standard length. It all depends on the figure and type of the gown. Skirts can be any length, so long as they are."

And Philadelphia modistes say English women have adopted the eight-inch-above-the-ground standard because they are "t constructed to make an exposure of calf and ankle either advantageous or becoming, while French and American be any length, so long as they are short.

Fast and Firm Friendships

- We are not content to simply sell a large amount of clothing each year-there is something bigger and greater in merchandising than mere volume of business
- ¶ Our idea is that in order for a house to make a lasting impression in a community it must give satisfaction and service, and when these primary things are established growth is inevitable.
- ¶ We want to maintain our position as Philadelphia's leading clothiers and do it on the principles of merit and of service rendered—these are the only things that ultimately count.
- ¶ Spring Suits and Top Coats such as may not be had elsehere are priced $30 and upward, with very attractive values at $45 and $50.
