Nancy Wynne Sees Several Smart Wraps in Dark Blue—She Attends Evening Musicale at the Plays and Players

I HAVE seen so many blue cloaks and topcoats lately, and they are so good looking! Mrs. Fitz-Eugene Dixon has a smart topcoat of a very dark blue. It's one of those rich, soft cloths probably a velour or silk duvetyne. I was not near enough to judge the material, but it was beautiful. It is cut long and circular and has large, comfortable sleeves. A quaint embroidery of a burnt onion shade runs up the back, around the shoulders and down the sleeves, and she wears with it a dark blue silk hat which is almost entirely devoid of trimming.

Mrs. Witney Wright also has a dark blue outer garment, but hers is in the form of a cape. It is a stunning bright blue and has a gray fox neckpiece. Emley(she was Emley Cook, you remember) wears a large blue picture hat with the cloak, and I saw Mrs. William Hemsley Avery the other day looking very well. She was wearing a long, dark blue cloak of silk duvetyne, which was finished about the neck with wide full collar of dark blue silk. Her hat was a small gray toque and it was trimmed with stiff feather ends of same shade. Mrs. Avery was Catherine Potter, a sister of Mrs. George H. Earle, 3d, who is a very good looking woman, too.

SPEAKING of Mrs. Earle reminds me of Mrs. Ralph Earle, who is going to be one of those who will augment the production of "Why Not?" when it is given at the Academy next week for the China Famine Fund. Other extra performers will be Mrs. Edmund Thayer, Mrs. George Smith, Barbara Clayton, Mrs. Percival Glendinning, Mrs. Gil Mather, Mrs. Bud Patterson, Mrs. McGruder Dent, Mrs. George Dallas Dixon, Jr., Mrs. Arthur Cooke (she was Amory Hare, the poetess, you know), Mrs. Neilson Edwards and several others.

The "Sleepy Blues," that song which Balloch Richards sang, has been developed into a feature, and when Balloch appears this time she will have a background of other girls clad in blue silk pajamas also to join in the chorus with her and dance. I hear that the J. Willis Martins will entertain in a box that evening, and the John C. Groomes, the Bertram Lippincotts and Dr. and Mrs. Joe Leidy. Mrs. Leidy is chairman of a special committee of the Emergency Aid, which is working for the China Famine Fund.

THE Plays and Players gave one of their delightful musical evenings last night in the playroom on Eighteenth street near Chestnut. Mrs. Sam Woodward and Lillian Taiz sang and Polly Thayer played her violin. Leslie Joy, who has a splendid baritone, sang very well, too, and Miss Barber was at the piano. Mrs. John Leigo is in charge of the Sunday evening affairs, and they are always very successful. Leslie Joy, by the way, is going to be Dick Dead-Eye in the coming Savoy performance next month. He is a born comedian, I think. I just loved his acting of Koko last year when the Savoy gave "Mikado." And when I get thinking of "Pinafore" I can almost hear him sing in answer to "Mercy Me, Why What Was That? Silent Be, It Was the Cat." And you know how wicked he will look when he tells the captain that Josephine (who is Mrs. McIver, Jane Maule that was) and Ralph (who is John B. Hipple) are about to elope, and how fine his voice will sound in the song, "Kind Captain, I've Important Information." Don't you love that song and its refrain, "Sing, Hey, the Merry Maiden and the Tar"?

Well to return to the Plays and Players, there were a great many there. Mrs. Ell K. Price, who is president, you know, and Mrs. Robert Geddes and the Joseph Conovers and Mrs. John B. Thayer, Jr., Mrs. George Dallas Dixon and ever so many others.

JUNIOR is not very often naughty, and when he is punished he takes it much to heart. So you can't very well blame his daddy for almost getting soft about the punishment the other night and escaping from the room with a rather choked and gulpy "Good night, son," after what I have to tell you about what had happened.

Well, Junior was pretty naughty, and so daddy said, "Well, June, daddy will have to send you to bed an hour earlier." And to upstairs they went and daddy undressed a sorrowful little boy and was about to put him into the covers when Junior knelt down by his little bed and, putting his small head down, implored in earnest tones, "Dear God, PLEASE make me a GOOD BOY, so my daddy won't have to put me to bed early again." NANCY WYNNE.
