A seen the very unusual waist that Jane Maule MacIver is wearing? It has a background of oyster white, and little flowers in pink and blue stripes are shot through the material. It's made rather long-waisted in a sort of basque effect, and is worn with a skirt of black satin. I saw Jane the other night at the Savoy Opera Co.'s rehearand she was wearing this costume sal, and ane was wearing this costume and a chain made of very large bends carved square and round and in several colors. Jane is to be Josephine in "Pinafore," I think I told you, and be a mighty pretty and attractive "Why Not?" the methinks.

darling as a Bad in Way Not? the other night. That silver turban was so becoming and the costume so unusual, and very smart and elever, I thought.

The rehearsals for "Pinafore" are s he's showing how to do it; or if one if the principals is absent Mr. Fox takes his place. He's Buttercup one second and he's leading the Sisters and Cousins and Aunts the next minute, and then he'll be Ralph Rackstraw and and then he il be Kaiph Racastraw try to shoot himself, as he did the other night when Josephine snatched the pistol from his hand and incidentally the glasses from his nose. And if Mr. Mitchell, who leads the music, is not there be even takes his place and leads the sailors and Sir Joseph's relatives from the piano stool. They are a gay and happy set, those Savoy members, and there is much talent among them. I shall be glad when the play comes off. t's bound to be good.

One picture I remember is Mrs. Mc-Kenzle talking with Queen Mary at the Ascot races. Dr. McKenzie is a noted sculptor, and they are both great lovers outdoors. England is a great place for out-of-doors entertaining. Tea in the garden, you know, and riding to hounds. It's all a part of every day, over there.
