WANAMAKER'S DOWN STAIRS STORE WANAMAKER'S little brook, and in a short time they stopped by the side of the seldom-used road. After Stanley had actually land-ed a fish, Hilda thought she would try her fisherman's luck. Stan seemed to enjoy baiting her hook with a wiggling warm, though Hilda had to turn away.

After losing her bait several times she felt a heavy jerking on her line. She pulled it in, exclaiming, "Oh, I must have the grandfather of all must have the grandfather of all fishes!" She gave a tremendous pull—and there on the bank beside her lay a horrible, great, wiggling cel! At Hilda's cry of alarm Stanley ran toward her, but he was just a little boy, and Hilda's terror frightened him. He began to wall. Hilda's panic increased as she constabled on the steam bank. The lies scrambled up the steep bank. The line somehow became entangled about her ankle, with the cel pulling and writhing at the end of the line. Hilds screamed and struggled, but could not release her foot. She suddenly realized Stan's fright and calmed herself.

There Stan dear, we'll get the old seel off somehow. Mary must have put a knife in the luncheon basket—will you Stanley ran to the car and opened the basket. 'No, there isn't, the bread's all san wiches, so we didn't need any.' Hilds tried to loosen the fishing line so that she could slip her foot from the noose, but the slight tugging caused the cel to flop and twist. Hilda jumped again and the cord tightened. After several trials, each seeming to stir the cel into greater activity, Hilda asked Stanley to go to the farmhouse across the field for assistance.
