JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Talks of Miss Atwater's Wedding to Mr. Makinson in Santo Domingo—Belfry Club Performance Postponed on Account of Accident

I THINK a great many of us who remember the late Commander Charles N. Atwater, U. S. N., and his attractive daughter, Mary Taft Atwater, who lived here for a number of years, will be interested to hear that she was married to George A. Makinson, who is our consul at Santo Domingo. The wedding took place down there on Tuesday in Easter week. And the little account I received of it sounds so pretty I am going to pass it on to you.

Mary was married at the home of her brother-in-law, Lieutenant Commander Lybrand Smith, in Santo Domingo City, and her uncle, Rear Admiral Thomas Snowden, took her into the room on his arm, but her mother, Mrs. Atwater, gave her in marriage. Chaplain Elder officiated and Lieutenant Commander Smith was the best man. Only the bridegroom was a civilian, you see.

Just being down there in the tropics—think of the decorations and general lovelinss of the flowers and plants in the background of the rooms and outdoors!

The orange blossoms were from the real trees and the bouquet was made up of lilies, roses and white azucena, which is the Dominican national flower.

The Marine Band played for the wedding and the guests danced on the palm-inclosed verandas. Then the bridal cake was tied with red, white and blue ribbons, and all the Americans there were muchly interested in the Dominican bride cake, which was a cone of pound-cake two feet high, thickly iced with white and silver. That must have been wonderful, must it not?

The Makinsons are living at the American Consulate in Santo Domingo and will remain there while the consul is stationed in that city. Mary Atwater lived here with her parents at the navy yard some years ago, and was a great favorite.

DID I tell you that Clarence Brinton is to be Sir Joseph Porter in the performance of "Pinafore" which is to be given by the Savoy company the last week in this month? The opening performance will be held on Thursday night, May 26, and it will be at the Broad Street Theatre, where the Savoy always gives its performances. The choruses are getting better and better every rehearsal, and the principals certainly have good voices. Franklin Wood is splendid as the Captain, and Lesley Joy (now I'm going to make a pun) is a "joy forever." After that I think I'd better not say anything more about the Savoy till I have some more news to communicate on the subject, don't you?

DID you hear that the boys of the Belfry Club of the Germantown Academy had to put off their performance because Sandy Wiener, who was to have taken the part of Penrod, had a bad accident the other day, and Carl Lorenz, who was to have been Sam, has the measles, which developed only on Wednesday?

It's too bad, as they have sold a thousand tickets for the performance, and it's almost impossible at this late hour to let every one know, so I'm afraid that a number of people will arrive at the Germantown Cricket Club tonight ready to enjoy the show.

However, it cannot be helped, so I'm sure every one will make the best of it and go on May 20, when it will be given, as by that time other boys can be trained in, or perhaps Sandy Wiener will be well enough then. He had a bad accident, ripped his left leg open with a spike on his right shoe while playing at the G. A. athletic grounds on Monday.

These boys in the Belfry Club do wonderful dramatic work. I always love to see them, and I hope the performance on the 20th comes off all right.

I HEAR that Paulina Bell and Jack Whelen will be married at Paulina's parents' country home in Haverford on the 14th of June at 4 o'clock. The ceremony will be witnessed by members of the family and the bridal party only, and a reception will follow at 4:30 o'clock.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

The Sterling Home

By IDA W. GOULD

Her name was Zarella How, and she was neither young nor pretty. Her disheveled hair and ink-stained fingers were not attractive. Over her desk hung a motto, "Nothing worth winning except by hard work."

The fruits of this woman's work surrounded her. A bust of Clytie, earned by the sale of "The Sailor's Revenge," stood near the set of Dickens, resulting from the "Midnight Mystery." Once her energy slackened, then she let her eyes refresh themselves with the sight of her real antique prayer rug, bought by the sale of "Another Child." Over the piano hung a well-earned water color, one made possible for her by selling "The Double Murder." Upon the mahogany table were fine bits of pottery. The very robe Zarella worked in was a Japanese kimono, delicately embroidered in artistic fashion. That resulted from "A Temperance Tale."

With splendid health and a small income from investments, she lived in a top room of a house that sheltered many other business women. Her courage was supreme, no amount of rejected manuscripts restrained her assiduity.

As early dawn glimmered, the woman flung her last production aside, put out the light, and slept till noon. Every afternoon she sent the work off to the editors of a limerick contest which had been running some weeks. She aspired to build a small home like one illustrated in "Sterling Homes."

A faint odor of heliotrope pervaded all her belongings. In her plan of a house a bed of heliotrope plants just outside her workroom was indicated. Heliotrope was her mother's best-loved flower. Zarella always bought heliotrope perfume instead of the more common violet.

She remembered her mother, working at the common tasks in the old homestead, and a saying of her mother's brought the most vivid and tender memories to her.

"Always keep something sweet-smelling that grows, about you, to take your mind off your drudgery."

She would have a Dutch Colonial home, box trees (like prim old maids) on each side of the brick walk. She would have plenty of heliotrope plants in her home. She would have a brass knocker in her front door, a lilac bush, a shelf for pitchers, and a cupboard like one described in a New England story of long ago. There must be a tall shelf with brass candlesticks, and a banjo clock. Outside, she desired a duck pond and a few weeping willows gracefully reflected in the small sheet of water. She knew she could gather fresh material for more stories in such surroundings. She pictured herself lying in the hammock, looking at the fleecy shapes above her, inhaling perfume from her flower beds.

She would paint her house white, with green blinds. She loved glistening white paint.

She remembered when her mother had taken her to visit a sea captain's wife in Newburyport.

The sea captain had an absolute passion for white paint. How kind every one had been there. Perhaps she, Zarella How, might pass along those same happy memories to some little girl, when she really owned her Sterling home.

The captain had given her a bunch of catnip and a shell at parting. The shell still did duty as a paperweight. The catnip had long ago been consumed by cats long since deceased.

* * *

Zarella's musings were interrupted by a knock, followed by the entrance of the top floor matron.

"Good evening, Miss How. A speshull dilivery for yer, by a esme; boy's waitin'."

Zarella broke the seal, read the contents of the letter, explaining in a delighted cry to the astonished listener:

"Mary, hear this; no, first tell the boy, here's the receipt for the letter."

"No bad news, miss?"

"Good—good—nothing like it ever came my way; hurry, then come back, but don't tell any one."

Mary made haste and was soon seated admiringly feasting her eyes on the beauty of the kimono.

"Listen, Mary":

"Magnum—Enclosed find our check for $5000.

"You are winner, not for the cleverness of your last lines, but for the sustained interest shown. Out of 20,000 answers yours are noted for general merit, but principally for being the only contestant sending an answer every day since the contest began.

"J. Knuff, editor the Searchlight."

"Glory be to God, miss, is it writing brought yer that?"

"Yes, Mary, and I'm going to get me a white Sterling home with green blinds with the money."
