Philadelphia Schools to Get $3,750,000

Must Meet New Requirements

Our normal schools, thirteen of them, will be open every summer. There are also from twelve to fifteen colleges and university summer schools.

Prize for Legislature

The Legislature that has just adjourned, continued Dr. Finegan, "is the first in our history to put the normal schools squarely on their feet. They are now owned and operated by the state, where formerly they were private corporations."

But will it not be an inducement for rural communities to reduce their taxation to a point where the state will ultimately bear the entire expense? I asked Dr. Finegan.

State to Go "Fifty-Fifty"

No. It is a case of the state going fifty-fifty with the rural districts. Districts must employ, when the system is in full operation, teachers with certain qualifications. In no case, however, does the state bear more than one-half the expense.

By fixing a longer term children in the country districts are given greater opportunities for education. Heretofore the term has been seven months. Next year it will be seven and a half, and after that it will be eight months.

I regard the new State Council of Education as a most important step in the system," Dr. Finegan went on. "The State Board of Education and the College and University Council are abolished. Hereafter there will be one body of nine members exercising supervision and direction of the schools from kindergarten to college. The State Council of Education.

The plan is to place nine of the largest men in Pennsylvania on this council.

The department of education is a great business enterprise. It is intimately connected with every home. The first business judgment should be brought to bear upon it. We want men of vision. We want their slant or judgment upon our progress and world.

Competent Supervisors Necessary

Competent supervisors of our public schools are a necessity. The business of educating our children does not begin to receive the same general supervision that an ordinary business does. Supervision of the work of unskilled labor in our mines is superior to that of our teachers. That is why the record has been so poor.

It is not contemplated to displace county superintendents. After this, though, anybody seeking such a position must have a college or normal school training, and six years of teaching and administrative experience. There are more than 200 of these superintendents and their assistants in the State. To attract those fitted for the job these salaries have been increased to $2500 and $4000. Assistant superintendents who now receive $1800 will after the beginning of the year get $2500.

Two new and vital things that will raise the educational standard of Pennsylvania have been introduced under Dr. Finegan. Instruction in every elementary school, public or private, must be in English or from English text; and compulsory attendance is required in every rural school in the State. Attendance officers will be held responsible accordingly.

"How do you expect to overcome the loss in the teaching force by marriage?" was the next question.

"My experience is that the higher the qualification demanded from a teacher the longer she remains in the service. The harder she has to study to get her position the longer she will retain it."

"There is an additional inducement. In first and second class cities there is an annual income of $100 a year for eight years for those who remain in the profession. In third class cities the same holds good for four years.

"We are looking ahead with a broad vision in this six-year race," said the doctor. "The lengthening of the school term will eventually lift Pennsylvania's standard to top place."

"The people must not deceive themselves. It will require the hardest kind of work to build our educational system along higher practical lines. We must have a public spirit. The people must encourage and help. The work cannot be done in Harrisburg. The citizens must take a greater interest in our schools. Communities must be aroused."

"The 1,750,000 children of Pennsylvania are the aim and appeal of our work."
