

Reparation Solution Big Harding Victory

Probably there will have to be an agreement on the part of this country and Great Britain to coerce Germany economically and even with a naval blockade in case of her failure to pay, in order to induce France to disarm. And in order to avoid the necessity of coercion, terms of payment will have to be made flexible so that the installments will be related to Germany's recovery and her ability to pay, though the total amount will remain constant.

But one thing can be depended upon and that is that the United States in the Supreme Council will seek the effective disarmament of Europe. Disarmament is proposed in this country. As the creditor of Europe, America can at least insist that her debtors follow her example and not waste their substance upon armament.

When reparations are settled it is expected here that the administration will withdraw its objection to the passage of the Knox resolution and that measure for declaring a state of peace will emerge from the foreign affairs committee of the House of Representatives. It is understood that before the resolution passes the House it will be further modified in form.

Faults in Peace Resolution

Objection has arisen to the language of the resolution regarding the declaration of war. In particular the American Legion, made up of soldiers of the late war, dislikes a repeal of the war resolution. Such a repeal is unappreciated and the Legion feels that it would in a sense reflect upon the war, carrying a sort of suggestion that the war had been a mistake.

It is understood that the administration is impressed with this view and inclines to have the resolution merely recognize the existence of a state of peace. President Harding in his inaugural address used, without by accident or design, language of that import.

according to the others, "frisked" the helpless man and obtained a revolver. This was the one used in the fatal shooting, they said, although Conn had another in his pocket.

The statement made to the detectives by young Blazjewski was as follows: "George Conn lives near me, and he is a bad boy, and has a bad name around our neighborhood, but I liked him because he often took me to the movies. Last Saturday he stopped David and me and said he was going out on the river to set some muskrat traps and wanted to know if we wanted to go along. We said we did."

"We got into the canoe and went across to Delair. Then we went up the Pennsylvania creek about 500 yards. Conn had a revolver in his pocket and it was loaded with blank cartridges. On the bank of the creek we saw a man asleep, and Conn went ashore and went through his pockets and stole his revolver, which was filled with bullets. I got frightened and wanted to go home, but Conn told me not to be afraid."

Sees Boat House Window Open

"We passed Mr. Hatch's boat house and Conn saw a window open, and he said he was going in to see what he could take. He went ashore and David and I pushed the boat out into the stream again. We saw a man go into the boat house and then we heard loud cries and fighting. Conn ran out of the boat house and Mr. Hatch followed him. Conn turned around and pulled the revolver from his pocket and fired two shots into Mr. Hatch's face. Mr. Hatch then grabbed Conn and took the revolver from him. But Conn broke away and waded out to where we were sitting in the boat. He was trying to get aboard."

"Mr. Hatch caught Conn just as he neared our boat. They started fighting again and Conn was getting beat. He said, 'Hit him with an oar, hit him with an oar,' but we didn't do it because we were terribly frightened. Conn broke away and said, 'I'm going to see how you like cold steel.' He pulled the stolen revolver from his pocket and fired at Mr. Hatch, who fell into the water. Conn climbed into the canoe and he paddled us back to the Philadelphia side of the river. He told us he would kill us if we opened our mouths. He was afraid to say anything to any one about it," the boy concluded.

The boys said that after they returned to the Pennsylvania side after the crime, Conn went to his home, changed his clothes, and disappeared. The missing youth's uncle said today Conn came home about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon and changed to his best clothes after demanding something to eat. He then hurried out after telling his relatives he was going to New York.

Two men were detailed to attend to him. He disappeared, but probably could be found floating down the Oder. Italian troops here declare they have lost severely in recent fighting against the Poles and appear to be greatly incensed. They are declared to have shown unkindness toward Polish prisoners, who are generally being handed over to them by their German captors. Ammunition has been received here from Breslau and from Oppeln, and German citizens are being armed and told to defend themselves.

Rome, May 10.—(By A. P.)—Expressions of indignation over the Italian fatalities during the fighting in Upper Silesia are continuing to appear in the Italian press. In reviewing the situation the Tribuna deplors the shootings and expresses the view that nothing good will come out of all the turmoil.

"The best outcome of this strange fiction of mounting guards by the inter-allied authorities will be to have the practice hereafter placed definitely outside the pale," says this newspaper.
