Seen in the Chestnut St. Macdonald & Co. Shops

From the original meaning of the word hanger, a dealer in drapery goods, it has come to mean, more particularly in this country, a dealer in men's furnishings. Philadelphia, in speaking of hanger goods, will recall immediately the well-established and reliable firm of Macdonald & Company.

A BARNET REFRIGERATOR

placed in the show window of J. Frank Miller, 1612 Chestnut Street, at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, containing sliced onions, cut fruit, milk and butter, etc., was being sold at a very low price. The refrigerator is a very attractive model. It is a light gray with a natural carnal color and would be a charming addition to the home's kitchen. It is priced at $75. For practical everyday wear, it has some plain velour coats in different colors and combinations which are really a bargain at $35. But the wraps which appealed to me the most were the tweed coats and the ones made in the latest styles. The colors, which are beautifully tailored, may be worn with or without the adjustable levers and are remarkable value at $15. The separate summer sport skirts are now in stock, and besides these there is a special sale of plaid velours at $15.
