Nancy Wynne Talks of the Pretty Summer Frocks This Season—She Hears Many Plans for the Horse Show This Week

HAVE you ever seen such pretty frocks as the girls are wearing? Really Jane Maule Maelver's look good enough to eat, when I met her one of the out-of-doors affairs last week. It was of that exquisite shade of watermelon pink that looks like home-made strawberry ice cream, just luscious, you know, and it had a rather fitted-in belt and two pockets in the skirt on either side and a little straight boyish looking bodice finished at the neck with a white Peter Pan collar, and the sleeves were very short with white turned back cuffs. Then she wore black silk stockings and white slippers and a big floppy hat of coffee brown with a big bow and a cluster of white straw trimmed straight across the front of the brim with a cluster of pastel shaded French flowers which drooped over the edge of the hat at each side and there was no trimming at the back.

Jane is sweet and pretty and so young looking. It does not seem possible that she's been married a year. Her good-looking husband, Lieutenant Maelver, is on from Boston for a while again. He is up there studying, you know, and Jane is waiting with her parents, the Charles E. Maules, on Rittenhouse street, until he finishes some special course he is taking up and I hear, too, that he is ordered to go very shortly, so Jane will probably stay on here until he has about duty again.

WHAT a pretty girl Walburga Reilly is! She will be a debutante next year and she certainly is a good looking one. She has pretty light hair and when I saw her the other day she was with Margery Large and I tell you I would not blame any one for looking more than once at them.

Mrs. Large, who has been abroad for several months, has returned home and in the fall she will introduce Margery's sister, Sarah Meade Large, her eldest daughter.

You remember Mrs. Large was Miss Mary Reakert, and she is one of Philadelphia's very prettiest matrons. She has the most gorgeous red hair and the complexion which goes with it. Of late she has done no entertaining, as she has been in deep mourning for three or four years for her husband, but now that it is time to bring her daughter out she has begun to go about again, and every one is so glad to hear her.

EVERY one is much excited to hear that on Thursday Major General Sumnerall, his staff and a company of infantry of his famous First Division, carrying the same battle flags that were carried by Americans in France in the World War, will officially raise the flag which has been given to the Horn Show and Country Fair by the Bryn Mawr Hospital, which is the beneficiary of the whole affair. Good night! Wasn't that a sentence! When you remember that the First Division was the first to arrive in France, fired the first shot for America and was the only division in its entirety decorated by the French Government, it will be something to see some of them, will it not? And Major General Edwards, commander of the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Division of Infantry, will accompany Major General Sumnerall. Then,

June. They will later go to Catham, Me., where they will remain until autumn. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston L.
