In their formal explanations of the necessity for closing the lobby, thereby destroying a custom of many years. Senators said it was not possible to admit the press to what technically is the Senate floor. Yet vesterday they showed no hesitancy in granting the 'privilege of the floor' to a group of waiters who served the lunch.

It is only a step further to adoption of the custom of the British House of Commons by establishing terrace tea gardens on the west side of the Capitol. It was predicted that after the Senate experiment shall have been approved by public acquiescence, huge colored umbrellas will be brought on from Palm Beach and quaint tea tables from New-Beach and quaint tea tables from New-port, the terraces closed to the public and Senators permitted to sip their cool-ing potions in the company of their specially invited guests.
