

A REAL FRENCH DEJEUNER GIVEN BY MRS. WILSON

Madame Is Very Careful to Have a Meal That Is Appetizing but at the Same Time Economical—Delicious Sweetbreads

By MRS. M. A. WILSON
(Copyright, 1921, by Mrs. M. A. Wilson. All rights reserved.)

The French housewife, as a hostess, prefers to entertain her really intimate friends at dejeuner or at little luncheons. These repasts are quite intimate and the menus arranged for these occasions usually contain the favorite dishes of those who are the guests of the day.

Madame usually arranges the table in full detail for an informal meal, covering and sparkling silver and crystal—all of which makes a most attractive table. Seldom do these affairs become extravagant—the usual thrift and economy of the housewife in the country districts is intensified and accentuated in Madame of the chateau or mansion.

No waste is the slogan in these homes across the sea in sunny France. Haphazard arrangements make for waste. So the thrifty Gallic woman carefully plans the arrangement of her menu, consulting frequently with the cook; for, unlike many of the domestics in this country, those daughters of France who preside over the kitchen take real pride in their work and are very adept at driving a sharp bargain for Madame.

Here is a real French dejeuner or luncheon:

Potato a la Bonne Femme
Salted Nuts
Casseroles of Sweet Bread, Bourgeoisie
Flageolettes
Lettuce
Cherry Tart
Toasted Crackers with Fromage Mints

and chill. Beat again before pouring over the lettuce.

Cherry Tart
The little individual tart pan is used for making these tarts. Line the pans with plain pastry and use a pastry flogger to cut strips of pastry one-half inch wide and sufficiently long enough to go around the edge of the pastry in the tart pan. Now brush the edges with a mixture of beaten egg and milk and fill with the following mixture.

Stone one pound of cherries and then place in a saucepan and add one cup of sugar. Heat slowly until the cherries are tender. Now add:

One-half cup of raisins, cut into bits.
One-half cup of nuts, cut into bits.
One-quarter cup of candied ginger, cut into bits.

Cool before using. Reserve about one-third of this mixture. Set the tart on a baking sheet and bake in a slow oven for one-half hour. Remove from the oven and fill to the top with the balance of the mixture which had been reserved for this purpose.

Coffee that is served at luncheon and dinner is the black demitasse of extra strength.

To prepare the toasted crackers—Brush the small square soda crackers very lightly with butter and toast a very delicate brown. These crackers must be washed very carefully while toasting, as they burn very quickly. The fromage or cheese may be cream cheese or roquefort, just as you wish.

The mints are usually prepared at home as follows: Place in a small pitcher

One cup of confectioner's sugar,
Three drops of mint extract or flavoring.

Cool sufficient boiling water to make an icing of this mixture. Set the tart on the pitcher and cut with a knife. Drop the mints on wax paper and allow to stand for two hours before removing. They may be placed on a plate covered with paper doilies. Some may be colored a delicate pink or green with vegetable coloring. This meal will serve six people.

stop laughing. Then they can't bite us.

That was queer advice, but Peggy and Billy didn't know what else to do. So before the lions could stir Peggy began to tickle it behind the ears just as if she were tickling Blinky, her pet cat. And Billy tickled the lion and Folly Wisner tickled the cub.

That seemed to be exactly the right thing to do. The lions were astonished at first, but they liked the tickling and soon the three of them were purring like cats. Only 100 times louder than the purring of any cat, Peggy or Billy had ever heard.

They purred and they purred, queer sorts of smiles coming on their faces. They seemed as tame as puppies, and Peggy and Billy felt like lion tamers.

But the lions were not so tame as they appeared to be, as Peggy and Billy soon found out and as you will see in the next chapter.

Know all men by these presents that Sally has satisfactorily passed the requirements of the faculty of appropriate dress for graduation exercises. For Sally wears a white crepe de chine frock with a white satin sash tied at the side and trimming of Valenciennes lace.

And this year there is nothing more modish than the crepe de chine graduation frock. Indeed, for the first time some of these dresses are made up in the very light pastel tints of crepe.

Instead of pulling the rugs back by the tails, the children were amazed to have the tails jerk them forward. The sand heaved at the other end of the rug, and out of the sand came three big heads—the heads of a great lion, of a lioness, and of a large lion cub.

My, but Peggy and Billy and Folly Wisner were startled. They knew then how the rugs had got there. The lions had been caught in the sand storm and had lain down, burying their heads in their front paws waiting for the storm to stop. And while they waited the sand had drifted over their heads.

The lions rawned, showing their great teeth, and turned toward the children and the goblin.

"Oh, what shall we do?" cried Peggy. "Tickle them!" answered Folly Wisner. "Tickle them until they can't

CHAPTER II
The Ticked Limes

PEGGY'S wish that the sand storm might stop was granted as soon as she had made it. She and Billy and Folly Wisner, the fat-faced goblin, dropped swiftly toward the ground.

"Oh, I hope we fall on something soft," cried Peggy.

The words were scarcely out of her mouth when ker-plunk she landed on a furry cushion. At the same moment Billy came down kerslam on a second furry cushion, and Folly Wisner tumbled kerchug into a third furry cushion.

"Waa-ugh!" grunted Peggy's cushion. "Wau-ugh!" rumbled Billy's cushion. "Wau-ouch," gasped Folly Wisner's cushion.

Peggy bounced to her feet to see what she had fallen upon. Her eyes rested on a yellowish brown rug.

"My goodness, how did that rug get here?" cried Peggy.

"That is just what I want to know," declared Billy, who was looking down upon a second rug.

"Shah-sh-sh! I think I know," whispered Folly Wisner, beginning to creep away from the rug on which he had landed. "The rugs came here on their own feet. Be quiet. Don't wake them up!"

Peggy and Billy laughed at this. How could rugs come on their own feet? "I have seen lots of rugs," said Billy, "but I never saw one that could walk unless some one was inside it."

"Sh-sh-sh!" whispered Folly Wisner. "That is what is the matter with these rugs. There is some one inside them."

Peggy and Billy stared at the rugs with wondering eyes. Yes, sir, they were rising and falling as if some one were inside of them. And as they looked a stick at the end of Peggy's rug rose and waved back and forth.

"Gracious, it is a tail!" gasped Peggy. At that moment a tail arose from Billy's rug, and then one from Folly Wisner's rug. Three tails waved in the air.

"It is queer for rugs to have living tails," said Billy. "I am going to look into this mystery. If persons are hiding under these rugs thinking to give us a scare, we will fool them."

Billy grabbed the tail of his rug and gave it a jerk. Peggy followed his example, jerking the tail of her rug, and Folly Wisner did the same. All three tails got sharp pulls.

"Then a surprising thing happened.
