

FIRST GIRL LISTED AS BICYCLE WINNER

Elizabeth Renninger, 13, of Collegeville, Leads Way for Rest of Sex HAS HER PLANS ALL MADE

The first girl winner of a Black Beauty bicycle in the PUBLIC LEDGER contest is a lass of thirteen, and she won it in a town of only 700 inhabitants. She did it in four days.

Elizabeth K. Renninger, daughter of William D. Renninger, cashier of the Collegeville National Bank, Collegeville, Pa., is the little hustler who set the pace for all others of her sex.

She said when she came to the LEDGER office to get her bicycle: "No, I didn't have any particular system. I just went from door to door, told them that I was soliciting subscriptions for the LEDGER and recited some of the many features that the papers carry into the home every day. I did not tell any one that I was working for a bicycle unless they asked me."

Had Made Up Her Mind "Yes, it was a little discouraging at first, but I just wanted that bicycle so hard that I made up my mind that I would call on every person in our town before I would give up. After so many turn-downs the first subscription made me very happy and then they just seemed to roll in. It was awful easy once I got started."

"I started Wednesday morning and worked hard all day without much luck, but by Thursday night I had twenty-five names signed. Monday night I had and the large lion cub they had found biding from the sandstorm. They were tickling the lions so the lions would feel happy and not think of eating them.

The tickling made the lions purr, their paws being like the rumbling of a train crossing a bridge.

"Yes, it is much better than scratching one's back on the bark of a palm tree," purred Mrs. Lion.

"I am getting hungry," purred Cub Lion. "I'd rather eat them tickled."

"Be patient, son," purred the father lion. "We have three fine meals waiting for us here after we have been tickled to our hearts' content."

Mr. Lion rolled his eyes toward Billy and licked his chops.

"I can't wait a moment longer. I think I'll take a nibble," Cub Lion opened his mouth as if to take a nip of Folly Wisner.

Folly Wisner, being a goblin, could understand animal talk, and when Cub Lion reached to nip him Folly Wisner tickled as hard as he could.

"Wow! Wow! Ugh! Wow!" grunted Cub Lion, laughing in spite of himself.

Folly Wisner tickled Lardner and harder, and Cub Lion laughed until he rolled on the ground. And while he laughed he couldn't bite, which was what Folly Wisner wanted.

Mr. Lion and Mrs. Lion laughed when they saw how Cub Lion was getting tickled, but after a time Mr. Lion quit tickling and gave a roar.

"I have been tickled enough," he said. "I am going to eat."

Other ten. I am going to use the bicycle for—well—to ride."

When she said "to ride" there was something about the determination in her face that would lead one to believe that she was going "to ride" it with business in view.

If she sticks to the newspaper business it looks as if the editor of the Collegeville paper would have to put in another Linotype.
