"I see nothing but good to flow from the full and free participation of women in the direction of the party."

With women sitting officially for the first time at the meeting of the Repub-Room in the Bellevue-Stratford, the session was held, was different from the old days.

Bright June-time hats and here and there a dashing sports costume stood out in marked contrast to the rows upon rows of somber blue serges. And be this remarked: The somber blue serges bowed low before the millinery. There was an air of the drawing-room about the Claver Room. Less vigorous handshaking and more polite bowing and beaming. And not one single little tendril of smoke dared to curl its way up through the atmosphere of the important chamber.

Important looking members of the
