YOUTH AGAIN CHOOSES POPULAR TAFFETA

London bridge may be falling down, but there need be no corresponding anxiety about this bridge of embroidered organly arching over its skirt of black taffeta.

But they didn't snap on Peggy. They snapped on the life buoy. Apparently the crocodile thought the invisible sailors were fishing and had thrown out the life buoy as bait. Any way, the crocodile snapped the buoy and locked his teeth on it so hard he couldn't get his jaws open again.

That hooked the crocodile just as a fish is hooked. The other end of the rope was tied to the boat and the surprised crocodile was dragged along through the water.

But surprised as the crocodile was, he wasn't nearly so surprised as Peggy was at what happened that same instant. She felt the invisible sailor give a great lurch. He grasped the crocodile as it was dragged away and all of a sudden Peggy found herself riding on the crocodile's back, with the invisible sailor holding her tight.

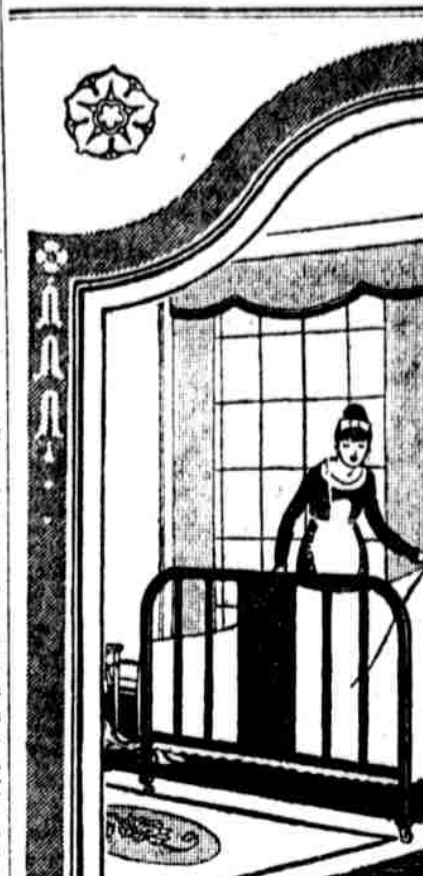

Then there followed an exciting ride. The crocodile hung to the life buoy as a bulldog hangs to a tramp's collar. Either it couldn't or it wouldn't let go. It was dragged swirling and thrashing in the foaming wake of the speeding sailboat.

There was no fun in a ride like that. But as they went swishing along Peggy was glad she was on the crocodile's back instead of swimming in the river.

She was glad because the other crocodiles were rushing toward them, opening greeny jaws. Those jaws would have made short work of the two if they had been swimming.

"Oh, I wish we were safe on deck," cried Peggy. And her wish was granted so quickly she was sorry she hadn't made it before.

This is Barcalo bedstead number 2117, finished in rich mahogany, walnut, oak, or dainty ivory enamel. Also built in twin sizes.

2 cents a week for rest Or $10 a day for cure? RECENTLY a woman went to a sanitarium for a rest.

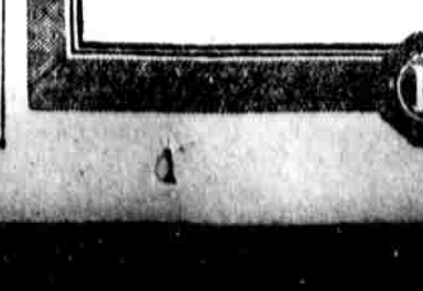

And what is the treatment? Mostly rest—and plenty of it, in a comfortable bed. This patient—like many a prudent housewife—spent only 2 cents per week per person for the beds in her home, according to the most accurate statistics.

And her lesson is costing her $10 a day—not because she didn't want to sleep—but, perhaps, because she didn't know why she couldn't rest.

Do your beds supply real rest? Perhaps in your home you may find certain beds that cannot supply real rest.

So we ask you to go to your furniture dealer with a list of what beds you need—and let him show you the best in the way of bed-comfort. We hope—of course—that he will offer you Barcalo Beds of sturdy steel in attractive designs.

But whether you buy a Barcalo Bed—or some other make, we are anxious to see that real sleep-comfort enters your home. And an investment of only 10 cents a week instead of 2 cents a week will enable you to insure complete health-giving rest.
