Twinkling Isle By DADDY

CHAPTER III Swinging High

PEGGY and Billy looked doubtfully at the tiny fairy. Should they follow the queer, flying, shimmering creature? ...

The words were no sooner out of her mouth than they heard a swish behind them. Before they could jump aside or ...

Another push, and up they went until they thrilled all over. Back again, and they got another mighty boost as if from a giant's hand. ...

The monkeys were hanging from a tall tree. One strong monkey was clinging to a limb of the tree, and the others ...

"Stop! Stop!" cried Peggy and Billy, but the monkeys thought they wanted to be pushed harder and gave them ...

"Oh, I wish some one would catch me!" thought Peggy to herself. And she got that wish, too. ...

BATTLESHIP PENNSYLVANIA FAMOUS FOR ITS "CHOW"

Great Dreadnought Filled Up With All the Conveniences of an Up-to-Date Model Town

By a Staff Correspondent With the Atlantic Fleet, June 29.—(By airplane courier to Hampton Roads)—They call her a battle wagon. They assert she has the best "chow" in the navy.

It is the landman's introduction to the Pennsylvania. Here with six other dreadnoughts, watching the bombing tests or engaging in gunnery practice off Cape Charles.

When built, the Pennsylvania was the most powerful fighting ship afloat. Now she is destined to stay in the Atlantic for a time, at least, while the newer, faster and more powerful vessels go to the Pacific.

But her crew's affection never wavers. It is the landman's introduction to the Pennsylvania. Here with six other dreadnoughts, watching the bombing tests or engaging in gunnery practice off Cape Charles.

Modern Conveniences Installed Here are a few of the adjuncts of modern civilization which the Pennsylvania carries about with her as a matter of course, but which the average landman perhaps knows little because he has never seen them.

Sleeping quarters below decks for 1500 men. Community kitchens that will feed them. A water-manufacturing plant that takes the salt water from the sea, removes the salt, purifies the water, and turns it into the tanks for drinking purposes and baths.

An ice-making plant like that of any hotel on land, though more compactly built. A hospital, with surgeons and physicians ready to operate or prescribe on a moment's notice, a pharmacy, a shop.

A library with good books and magazines. A Y. M. C. A., a gymnasium, shower baths, a medicine hall.

Movies, a chapel, a chaplain. A baseball team, boxing contests. A machine shop, carpenter shop, paint shop, laundry, leather shop, canteen.

A ball. Put them all together between walls of armor, surrounded them with some of the latest fighting apparatus in the world, surround them with turrets that weigh tons and move with the ease of watch hands, install long great guns that cough flame and death, erect tall fighting tops that from a distance look like the handsome doctor, although he had given them no encouragement.

"It isn't like that with me," Harry Morton went on. "I've loved you for four years, ever since you came here as a probationer, and used to sit in the anatomy class with your eyes fixed on me like two shining stars. I could see them in the dark, after I went home."

"Don't, Harry, for goodness' sake, I must go back to the hospital now," she said glancing at her watch. "I'm on duty again at 2, and there's an operation from the charity ward."

"That's a fact, I nearly forgot my duty," he said, looking at his watch. "I must go to the hospital now."

"Yes, but you don't seem to realize that you'd relieve my suffering a whole lot, Edith, if you'd marry me," said the doctor, sadly. "It isn't as if I could marry simply for a home. I guess I could get some one who would be willing to be my wife."

"I'm sure you could, dear." In a flash Edith Johnson ran over in her mind the number of nurses in her acquaintance who had been "crazy" about him.

"Oh, I wish some one would catch me!" thought Peggy to herself. And she got that wish, too. The tiny fairy, shimmering and up and back again, and then was dropped lightly to the ground.

Above her swung Billy, who had been caught by another string of monkeys. Billy was dropped as she had been, but he was dropped turning somersaults, and down he came on his feet.

The tiny fairy buzzed around them, smiling and laughing more than ever. The fairies were still beckoning to them and so, waving a farewell to the monkeys who had saved them, they ran off for the fairies. Where the fairies led them will be told tomorrow.
