Nancy Wynne Sees Some Cool-Looking Frocks—She Tells of the Women's Republican Club, Which Will Form a Permanent Organization on Monday

THESE humid days it is not a relief to see a cool-looking frock. In fact, there seem to be a few too many of these frocks for this torrid season, and although the material is not so good, they are not so warm, cool as you noticed?

WILL most of the entertaining in Philadelphia for the year, many of our social circles have decided to get together and form a permanent Republican Women's Club of Pennsylvania and they have called a meeting for next Monday at 7 o'clock in the Pennsylvania Club rooms for this purpose.

A limited number of women have been invited to become charter members. There are to be active members. The supporting members. The charter members will pay dues of five dollars, the active members three and the supporting members one. Some persons who have been told that the active members were not to pay dues, but this is a mistake. I think it will be a very interesting club.

Well, the Republican Women's Club will hold its first meeting every month, and will be held, when various speakers will be asked to talk to the members. The club is to be a sort of political and social organization for the independent Republican women working for the good of the party.

The organization officers are Mrs. George H. Lorimer, president; Mrs. Helen E. Kelly, vice president; Mrs. Frederick Schell, Mrs. Rudolph Blankenbush, Mrs. Edward Blodde and Mrs. I. H. O'Hara, chairman of the advisory committee.

A number of women who were members of the Wynns and Means Committee during the recent election, and who remain as members of the club. They are Mrs. Dobson Altomus, Mrs. William Austin, Mrs. George T. Taylor, Mrs. Helen E. Kelly, Mrs. Samuel Boyle, Mrs. Louis Bregy, Mrs. Charles Carver, Mrs. Herbert Clark, Mrs. Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Mrs. De Witt Taylor, Mrs. George D. Dixon, Mrs. Clarence Dolan, Mrs. George Dunning, Mrs. A. A. Eschner, Mrs. Stanley Glavin, Mrs. J. M. Gilbert, Mrs. Henry B. Grove, Mrs. Walter W. Hopkinson, Mrs. Charles C. Harrison, Jr., Mrs. Braden Kelly, Mrs. Helen E. Kelly, Mrs. Alexander Laughlin, Mrs. J. Bertram Lippincott, Mrs. J. Willis Martin, Mrs. Vaughan Merrick, Mrs. Edward Parker, Mrs. Gladys Nichols, Mrs. Henry H. New, Mrs. Thomas Robinson, Mrs. George Snowden, Mrs. Cornelius Stevens, Mrs. Robert Strawbridge, Mrs. James Francis Sullivan, Mrs. Daniel S. Taylor, Mrs. Alexander T. Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Barclay H. Warren, Mrs. William White and Mrs. Lewis Zeigler.

Did you hear that the Witney Wrights have a small daughter? Mrs. Wright, you remember, was only two years a daughter of the Queen. She is a daughter of the Queen. Mrs. Wright has a small daughter, and she is a daughter of the Queen. Mrs. Wright has a small daughter, and she is a daughter of the Queen.

Did I tell you about Caroline, who had been wanting a kitten for a long time? She had begged daddy for it, and had added the request to her prayers night and morning. Well, one day she came to her father, and said, "Daddy, I want a kitten." "I don't ask for a sister; I asked for a kitten." NANCY WYNNE.

BRIDE OF THE WEEK

ward second cook crew, that is to say, at 7 o'clock this morning, Warren, handling a slim figure, roughly shaved, into a very decrepit family carriage, noted upon its panel a license with a crest recalling the lines of the sheet of paper. He said nothing beyond a gay good-by. But before next day he was rummaging through dusty papers in the office of the clerk, searching out names, dates, dusty deeds and wills and comparing them with a span new letter of inquiry his firm had received a week before. He had almost found it, when he discovered that the name was not a name, but a name, but a name.

What's this? Warren asked, blocking the way of a sheeted figure in front of him. Apparently it had the neck of a giraffe, so that Warren, looking at it, was reminded of a giraffe. Warren looked at it, and he was reminded of a giraffe. Warren looked at it, and he was reminded of a giraffe.

What a shame! If there's enough of you to love, Warren returned, making a fumbling clutch at a shrouded arm. "Let's feel," he thought, "as his fingers identified buttons clearly stamped in the material. He picked up a stamp in his pocket, and he was reminded of a giraffe." Warren looked at it, and he was reminded of a giraffe.

With that he tried to swing the giraffe across his hip, but met with amazing resistance. His captive writhed, and he was reminded of a giraffe. Warren looked at it, and he was reminded of a giraffe.

Put on your shoe and come out on this piazza—nobody's business, your foot, Warren whispered, dragging the girl away. Giggles followed them. In the encounter her high-spiked headdress had got away, letting the sheet droop like a curtain, and she was reminded of a giraffe.

Some Truths About Russia

When M. Alexander Schwartz went to Russia in 1920 to attend the Third Internationale as a delegate from the Communist wing of the Socialist party of America, his mind was open. He was born in Russia. His father was executed for complicity with the Nihilists. Mr. Schwartz lived in Russia till he was thirty-five years old. He served his term in the army, where he was converted to Nihilism, and he renounced for another term because he thought he could advance better in the army than anywhere else, and he rose to the rank of lieutenant. Then he was arrested and exiled to Siberia as a Nihilist. He later escaped to America, and he has since been familiar with old Russia and in sympathy with the new Russia that he left.

When the Bolshevik Government discovered that Mr. Schwartz and his wife had been talking with the people and had been writing the country, they were arrested and they were kept in prison for several months. They were released, but they were not allowed to leave the country. They were kept in prison for several months. They were released, but they were not allowed to leave the country.

Georgia Town Made Real

Florence Olmstead, who has turned out several readable novels since she won a reputation as a fictionist of ability with "A Cloistered Romance," has surpassed herself in "This Little World" (Scribner). The title is emblematic of a Georgian community. But, unlike "Main Street," there is not one of the hard-as-nails "small town" expostives which seem to be the trend in contemporary fiction. The writer knows the traits, the restrictions, the spiritual and intellectual and material limitations of her field and does not hesitate to work them into her story, but she also knows the essential humanity of "just folks," and her book has the human touch, too. It is a much more serious work than her previous work, and it is sweeter with wholesome sentiment. A wild young fellow who is trying to settle down, a delightful heroine and an up-and-coming parvenu who is making a success of business are the chief figures. The subsidiary people are droll and interesting.

Stealing a Mine A vigorous and well-planned endeavor to steal the Blue Poppy Silver Mine forms the groundwork of Courtney Ryley Cooper's interesting novel, "The Cross Cut" (Little, Brown & Co.). A man under a cloud leaves the title to the mine to his son, who plunges into immediate trouble on his coming to take possession. The "villains" in the plot are a man and his son, who, it develops, are in the end, the heroes.

The Tragic Bride Francis Brett Young is one of the younger British novelists about whom people are beginning to talk. He is an enthusiastic about him. Walpole calls Young "a romantic idealist in the modern Conan Doyle sense." However, on the evidence of "The Tragic Bride" (Dutton) he is also a realist in treatment and method. There is a parallelism about his style, but rich about his insight, in this interesting novel about an Irish girl forced into an unsuitable and unhappy marriage with a man much older than herself and temperamentally unfitted for her mate.

Modern Corsica in a novel about Corsica without a Bonaparte overshadowing it is a rarity, though of course Dumas did manage one in his story of the brothers, Alexander and Lucien Bonaparte. However, in "The Corsican" (Dodd, Mead), Paulson, intrigue, adventure alternate rapidly in a colorful plot with a triangle constructed on somewhat un-

Galusha Is Magnificent No discriminating person who reads a novel by Joseph C. Lincoln is surprised at his popularity. Mr. Lincoln is a man of letters, and he writes with the kind of freedom and gets this into his books. As people are pretty decent and have a faith in one another they are pleased to read a writer who devotes himself to exhibiting the better side of humanity with a kindly humor and a tolerance for their failings. Mr. Lincoln has done this in "Galusha Is Magnificent" (D. Appleton & Co.). Galusha is a delightful character. He is an archeologist who makes a specialty of Egypt. His health breaks down, and he finds himself on a rainy October night in a small village on Cape Cod, whether he had expected to visit a friend who had invited him, but he finds himself involved in the life of the community, where he is regarded as a poor but harmless professor. He succeeds in straightening out several matters, and the book ends on a pleasant way. Galusha is a combination of helplessness and shrewdness and

TARZAN the Terrible by Edgar Rice Burroughs

FOR sheer startling adventure this latest Tarzan story is Edgar Rice Burroughs' greatest. You will follow the magnificent ape-man breathlessly through the undiscovered country of Pal-ul-don into which his wife has disappeared. There Tarzan's craft and cunning are put to new tests as he copes with tree and cave-dwelling men of a pre-historic species; and with monster reptiles like those of pre-glacial times. It's the most amazing of all Tarzan books.
