Their reasoning runs like this: Defenses against air attack may be discovered. If they should be, then at once you return to the condition which return to the condition which existed before air bombing was developed and the nation which has the strongest lot of capital ships will have centrol of the seas as always in the past. Moreover, even if defenses against air attack are not perfected. then if a nation having adequate cap-ital ships can maintain ascendency in the air, her predominance on the sur-face of the sea will be just as valuable as it has been in the past.

Triple Naval Policy

Naval policy in view of the bombing will have three general aims, ascendency in the air, the development of defenses against air attack and the continuance control upon the surface of the water through capital ships.

capital ship becomes the last line

Therefore, though a revolutionary thing has probably happened, the revclution will proceed slowly. The cap-ital ship will continue to be advocated as something which is likely in the end to prove indispensable. But nations will be slow to add to their present supply of heavily armored vessels, and in this way the bombing will aid disarrament. An agreement restricting Urges State Pay

This is a long look shead, one that naval opinion will not take, but one that nevertheless seems justified by the fact bombing from the air is in its infancy and is capable of vast develop-ment. Moreover there remains the possibility of armor-piercing bombs which, dropped on the deck, will go through the protection armor and explode in the ship's vitals. In Thursday's tests armor-piercing duds containing sand were dropped on the Ostfriesland. These were small, but they went through two decks, reaching the protective deck. They seem to indicate that similar bombs weighing one ton would penetrate a
