

CALL CITY COLLEGE SOUND CIVIC POLICY

Research Bureau Commends Creation of Municipal University or More Free Scholarships

AGREE WITH GEO. A. WELSH

The creation of a municipal university in this city or a big increase in the free scholarships granted high-school graduates here was commended as sound civic policy by the Bureau of Municipal Research today.

The bureau, in substance, agreed with George A. Welsh, newly appointed member of the Board of Education, who on Tuesday urged the establishment of a city college so that higher education could be provided for every qualified person desiring it. Discussing the situation in this city, the Municipal Research Bureau stated: "Philadelphia, blessed with two universities and numerous other professional schools, has somewhat less need of a municipal university than have other cities not so fortunate. On this point, however, New York City, with its several private universities and colleges and its two successful city colleges, offers food for thought. We may well inquire of ourselves whether we are taking full advantage of the ability which from year to year passes out of our high schools.

"All that we do now is to grant college scholarships to a limited number of our graduates. Less than seventy-five a year are selected to receive this assistance. Many more continue their studies, but without doubt there are many for whom the expense is prohibitive. It would be a mistake, however, to consider the subject only from the standpoint of the high school graduate, for there must be many others who would be glad to have the cost of special courses brought within reach.

"It is good business for a community to give its citizens all the education they can utilize. It is a short-sighted public policy which abandons the ambitious student at his high school commencement. His equipment then is such that he is reasonably sure of being able to take care of himself. A few more years, however, do more than increase his ability to help himself—they increase out of all proportion to the additional time and expense involved the return in service which the community expects to receive and does receive from its more highly trained citizens.

"Philadelphia might increase the educational opportunities of its citizens either by founding its own university or by more effective co-operation with institutions already existing. Which would be the better plan is a difficult question. Whether the city should increase the opportunities is a far less difficult question—indeed, there should be no doubt about the answer."
