Referred to Readers

Perference of the Evening Public Ledger:
For the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:
Sir—On Saturday evening. July 16, I noted to a steady breeze was blowing, so I was ticed a steady breeze was blowing, so I was the preliminary to diplomate the document signed by the representatives of friendly powers in order to secure certain political ends for a pose, and I am sure I and I am su ting dark, so I began to "take in," and at $16 I had wrapped up all the string and was only a few feet from the wire. Upon was only a few feet from the wire. Upon teaching the wire a strong electric shock could be felt as strong or stronger than the "house" current (110 volts). When the wire was touched a small spark could be seen. The current was felt at the least touch of the wire. It could be felt from the ground size, provided one hand was on the wire. We broke the wire with a dry piece of wood, some the wire with a dry piece of wood, and the kite was lowered about twenty-five feet. The wire was then dragging on the ground. I picked it up and the current was felt no more. elt no more. Can you explain the reason for this? It

It suits puzzling to me, as it was not at all like Franklin's experience, because it was not at all like Franklin's experience, because it was assister raining nor lightning, but there was a damp ground under us. Hoping to see a reply in the paper soon, I remain, Favors Shirtwaist Man To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir-It was with great interest that I read W. J. Fleming's letter. I fully agree with him that men should dress as comfortably as that men should dress as comfortably as the women in hot summer weather.

For the last fifteen years I have thought that it should be made possible for men to appear in shirts, without coals, during the bot summer.

I this that

I think that a man who has a clean shirt en, with beit, looks very well and good shough to go anywhere, and no woman who stops for a moment to think how awfully accomfortable it must be for a man to rear a heavy coat in summer would object to the shirtwaist man.

A SYMPATHIZER.

Philadelphia. July 27, 1921.

Be Lenient With Faded Girl

the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—A factor which probably has greatly influenced the mind of the modern girl is that she must not in any event loss casto with the members of her set. Not all classes of young women possess the ability is accomplish the task. Others dare not attempt it because "mamma" does not approve. But to the great majority of the immortalized type of shopsiril and officerial and the aspirant to social prestige the lipstick, powder-puff system is an absolute essential in her social code. And "there is a reason."

seemial in her social code. And "there is a reason."

Take, for example, the sirl who is subjected to long hours of confinement indoors behind a dask or counter. Her complexion in time becomes sailow, her eyes lose their laster, and her spirits become beforged by the menotany of hor work. Send this sirl sut for an evening of fum. She must cover up the lines of fatigue in her face. She must cover up the lines of fatigue in her face. She must cover up the lines of fatigue in her face. She must for a few hours at least, be a healthy, happy and care-free sirl, and perhaps she is not a girl, but has still not quite lost her tasts for wholesome fun. What woman of thirty, forty or fifty likes to be shoved aside as old, rusty and undesirable, simply because she has lost her color and her routh, when her heart is hungary for a good because she has lost her color and her south, when her heart is hungry for a good time?

Artificial and deceptive? Yes. Injurious any expensive? Yes. But this is not a time to begin a tirade against these girls and women who are trying, in the only way they know, to enjoy life. We need not discuss their shortcomings and their near-sightedness. We need not deplore the lack of proper care which has resulted in premature jadedness. We may disapprove and ridicule and advise, but the fact remains that no girl can enjoy a good time with a faded complexion, hollow and black-ringed the same and a last year's frock, and no girl's life is worth the living without an occasions, good time. HELEN V. CARY. Philadelphia, July 15, 1921. Artificial and deceptive? Yes. Injurious
