Letters to the Editor

The Answer Is Yes!

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Inclosed you will find a cartoon which I have clipped from the Evening Bulletin of August 5, which claims that the same was printed in the Kansas City Times.

I remember the same cartoon in a recent issue of your EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER by the most wonderful cartoonist in existence—Sykes.

Kindly advise if there is a copyright issued on all your cartoons or otherwise.

H. BONN.

1921 South Franklin street, Philadelphia, August 5, 1921.

Yes, Mr. Sykes' cartoons are copyrighted by the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER, for which they are drawn.

Dependents and Wounded First!

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—In a letter signed Joseph E. Barnes, appearing July 30 in the People's Forum, Mr. Barnes claims that the ex-service men have been insulted by a letter signed "An American Legion Man." I did not see this letter, but from the quotations I fail to see where any ex-service man has been insulted unless he is one who expects entirely too much to repay for the service he should have been only too willing to give to his country.

Mr. Barnes, the ex-service man does not ask the people of the country to pay him for his service. Will a few dollars pay the debt that is owed to the man with the empty sleeve or the wound which will take years from his life, or will dollars pay the mother for her son who was ready to give his life for his country when the time came?

They will not, and to think so is to insult not only the ex-service men, but the mothers and wives of the men who were left in France. There are thousands of families depending on work and thousands of families depending on these men for support; but they are not only ex-service men or ex-service men's families, and I cannot see why they should be burdened with an additional tax now when they are least able to pay it.

Personally I want the bonus and need it and am entitled to the maximum payment under the bonus bill; but I want first to see the wounded amply taken care of and the dependents of those killed provided for, and I don't want to see the people of the country given an additional burden.

Those Week-Ends in Jersey

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—You stop work Saturday at noon, take a long gaze at the distant horizon and decide that it is going to be clear and hot for a couple of days, eat your sandwich and then go to the garage and crank up the car, which you just cleaned the night before in preparing for the anticipated week-end. All dolled up, with a few friends, you turn your wheel toward Market street ferries. After a couple of hundred cars get a ride on the boat, they treat yours. If you are lucky enough to get by the milestones, who wear shined-up celestial insignia, without a salute, and if you had sense enough to tie on a couple of spares and a few patches you arrive at the restless aqua, a little dusty, but happy. After participating in a few calisthenics to loosen up your knotted muscles you are ready to start the expedition to find a cot. After you have been turned down a score of times with that kindly expression, "We have no more accommodations," you finally run into a place up a small-sized street where the lady could put a cot in the attic, if you don't mind.

After that's all settled, you open your bag and break out the white jeans and try to shake the wrinkles out the windows. After dressing you are then ready for the grand march on the lumber walk; after walking until your girl has decided that she has been blessed with a few more corns, you line up at a cafe and wait for a table. After several women faint in the line and have to be carried out, giving you a chance to move up, you finally get a table; all you have to wait for then is the waiter.

After you have decided that you've spent all your dough, and your girl has decided that she has had a very pleasant evening (and part of a morning), you buy a rolling chair to get home, say good-night to your girl and start up the ladder to find your cot. Everything's fine for an hour or so until the boys from the "big town" come home; the noise starts and finally dies down in about an hour; then some one falls down the steps going after some ice for a sick friend.

The landlady said that she is going to get some fly netting next week to put on the windows. The mosquitoes must have heard her and decided to make hay while the sun shines, after having robbed you of as much nourishment as you put into yourself that night, with your good money. You get at least two or three good minutes' sleep before it is time to get up. You get up, shave, put on a bathing suit and go out on the beach where you can soak up all the heat you want without charge.

All finished you go to the garage and try to find your car; after giving the garage man all but your ferry money you start home in the funeral procession, reaching Camden at dusk and Philadelphia at daybreak, and you all decide that you are very tired, but have had a wonderful week-end. After staying home from work a day or so to doctor your over-toasted flesh and rest your muscles you decide that it all comes under the head of "pleasure."

Cut Restaurant Prices

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—In your editorial crusade for the man in the street why don't you wallop the restaurants as well as the soda fountains? We can get along without the latter's products, but eat we must. W. S. V.

Philadelphia, July 16, 1921.

Suggestions for Camping

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—"C. E. V." asks for information regarding camping. I will do my best to aid him. He did not state the length of time he would be gone or the number of persons in his party, so I will give the approximate cost for two persons for one week's stay.

In the first place, a tent is necessary, although in nice weather a sleeping bag will do just as well. Two heavy woolen blankets should also be included.

Below a list of necessities and a few hints on different articles.

10 pounds of flour @ .04	$.40
15 pounds of sugar @ .06	.90
5 pounds of beans @ .05	.25
2 pounds of bacon @ .25	.50
½ pound of tea @ .60	.30
1 ounce of black pepper @ .10	.10
5 pounds of sweet chocolate @ .40	2.00
5 cans of evaporated milk @ .15	.75
2 bars of laundry soap @ .05	.10
1 can of sulphur matches @ .10	.10
Total for eatables	$5.40

Beans, tomatoes, corn, sauerkraut and the like, may also be purchased in cans, which, I think, is cheaper in the long run, as it saves dishes and washing.

Other things to be carried are an aluminum cook kit and a serving kit, a gun or revolver, securing permit to carry it; two waterproof matchboxes of hard rubber—one filled with salt. Don't forget a good rope. It will come in handy when you are coming home to tie up your tent, etc. A little mosquito netting is a good thing to wrap around your face when you lay down to sleep.

OLD-TIMER.

Victims of Public Opinion

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—The letter of William J. Fleming on the question of men wearing coats in the summer weather was indeed true enough to strike at least a responsive chord in the sweltering bosom of the men. For it is a fact that men do not have the courage to dress as they feel they would like to, and while they try to find fault with the styles that are more or less adopted by more sensible women, who always look and feel cool in summer, they seem to be afraid to break away from the coat and collar.

They suffer more from the heat in consequence. And why? Because some one might say, "Look, he has no coat on." Men are, after all, victims of public opinion, until some one is bold enough to come out manfully and say, "This is the style—no coat." Then they will all fall in line.

GEORGE C. GILLESPIE.

The Price of Ices

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—In order to illustrate my point let me copy for you from a Brockton, Mass., newspaper, as follows:

"In one of the windows of a local grocery company is a rather unusual display, showing the goods themselves and their respective prices on June 14, 1920., and the prices of today. According to their figures, the goods shown, which are supposedly of everyday use, are priced today at a total of $22 in comparison with $51.59 a year ago.

"The list as exhibited follows:

	June, 1920	June, 1921
100 pounds sugar	$22.00	$7.00
2 pounds coffee	.80	.50
¼ barrel best bread flour	2.15	1.35
1 pound tea	.50	.35
4 pounds corn meal	.40	.10
5 tins solid pack tomatoes	.05	.50
4 pounds best head rice	.60	.24
4 pounds pea beans	.80	.28
4 tins best green peas	1.12	.68
3 pounds pearl tapioca	.54	.25
2 pounds pearl barley	.34	.13
9 tins Maine sweet corn	1.62	.88
3 pounds best creamery butter	1.92	.99
6 pounds pure lard	2.10	.75
2 pds. mild whole-milk cheese	.70	.42
2 dozen guaranteed eggs	1.18	.58
3 one-pound loaves bread	.33	.19
3 dozen doughnuts	.90	.57
10 pounds high-grade ham	4.80	3.00
5 pounds bacon squares	1.45	.85
5 pounds salt pork	1.50	.70
6 pounds smoked shoulder	1.92	.96
2 pecks old potatoes	2.00	.85
4 bars laundry soap	.52	.20
1 large jar jam	.45	.29
Totals	$51.59	$22.10

In this connection I would like to ask your readers for opinions upon the prices of ice cream, water ices, ice cream soda and every "sweet" in the confectionery and bakery line.

Ice cream of the best quality before the war was eighty cents a quart; now it is $1.25.

Cinnamon bun—a bread dough sweetened with molasses, sugar, or whatever it may be, a sprinkling of currants added—costs anywhere from sixty to seventy-five cents a pound.

An ice—sweetened water with flavoring—costs from thirty to thirty-four cents—perhaps more in some places.

Profiteers met with universal contempt during the war, and sugar soared to heights while we abstained from using it to send it abroad to our service men. Now sugar is one-fourth the price, and the profiteers are the dealers who demand war prices for "sweets"—the summer necessities.

Think of the cooling drink and the ice cream the little children love! Is it fair? Is it just for us to "suffer fools gladly" and pay the price demanded rather than make a "drive" to bring about the fools' awakening from their dreams of millions drawn from a too-willing public?

Let us do something. A. PARKER.

"About Face" on Bonus

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—The "powers that be" have been at work very hard against the ex-service man. We all know our President never said anything against that bonus after election, meaning that it was up to the Senate to pass it to give the ex-service men justice. A week ago the Senate took that much-discussed piece of legislation and was about to act upon it. Then the President hurried from New Jersey to tell the Senators to stop or they would break the Treasury.

This about face of our President shows me clearly how strong and tyrannic the "powers that be" are. Is there back of it an autocratic government?

About breaking the Treasury—they cannot fool the American soldiers that way. If the already depleted treasuries of England, France and Italy didn't break when they paid their bonus, surely the Treasury of the United States will not break when we take notice that the world's supply of gold is deposited in Wall street and the country has 26,000 more millionaires than before the war.

Are we downhearted? No! But we want justice. We do not want to break the Treasury. We do not want any power to run the United States Senate. Buddies, we fought for justice, so they said. Let us never give up until we get justice.

Questions Answered

The First Talking Machine

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Was Edison the inventor of the first talking machine, or did he merely develop some other person's idea? W. L. L.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

Edison developed the talking machine and put it into practical use. The first mechanical device for the registering and reproduction of speech and other sound was the invention of Leon Scott, known as the phonautograph and constructed in 1855. His invention embodied the essential principles on which the present-day instruments were based. Edison produced a phonograph in 1876 and the first patent was dated January, 1877.

Meaning of "Eminent Domain"

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Please explain to me what is meant by the term "eminent domain."

CHARLES T. PARK.

Philadelphia, July 31, 1921.

Eminent domain is the supreme right of property possessed by a State over the article of private ownership. The right of eminent domain is the right to take private property for public uses. In the United States its justification is the common welfare and the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution provides that just compensation must be made. The right is usually exercised in order to secure land for the construction of railroads, highways and canals.

Death Rate in Wartime

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—How did our death rate in the World War compare with the highway death rate in the United States? STEPHEN T. WARE.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

At a conference on highway traffic regulation held at Yale University recently, it was stated that in the period of our participation in the World War our war losses numbered 48,000 deaths, while during the same period there were 91,000 persons killed on the highways of the United States, 25,000 of whom were school children. It will be noted that in nineteen months the highway fatalities nearly doubled those of our forces in the greatest war in history.

Poems and Songs Desired

Wants "Romeo and Juliet"

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—I am very anxious to secure a poem entitled "Romeo and Juliet," which begins:

"Oh, I've a host of memories
Embroidered in my brain,
And lookin' at 'em makes me
Wish that I were young again."

S. L. S.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

Solution to Problem in Rhyme

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—The "Problem in Rhyme," submitted by "I. H. K." in your issue of August 1, can be solved by means of the following equations:

3y less x equal to 99.
4y less 5x equal to 0.

I will try and give the solution in rhyme as well, saying

At the present time I'd fix
Richard's age at thirty-six.
Brother Robin seems alive
Nine years longer; forty-five.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

"Wanted a St. Patrick"

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—I would like to see printed a poem entitled "Wanted a St. Patrick." It contains these lines:

"There are no snakes in Ireland, for St. Patrick kicked them out.
He did his bit for Erin when he put the pests to rout;
Oh, would that that old patron saint was back on earth today,
To kick the spies and traitors from this good old U. S. A."

W. L. MALARKEY.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

Author of Quotation Located

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—Can you tell me the author of the poem, the last two lines of which are:

"He raised a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down."

A. MORTON.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

The lines are from Dryden's "Alexander's Feast." We cannot print the poem on account of its length. The last verse is:

"Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown,
He raised a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down."

A Favorite Hymn

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—I will appreciate it if you will print in your People's Forum the words of the hymn, "It Singeth Low in Every Heart."

SARAH T. CLOAK.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1921.

"IT SINGETH LOW IN EVERY HEART"

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call;
They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

'Tis hard to take the burden up
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown;
But, oh, 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

More homelike seems the vast unknown
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore!
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God, forevermore.

—John W. Chadwick.

"Mrs. W. M. L." asks for the poem called "The Quarrel." It begins:

"Topaz brown and lambent burnt her eyes,
And shot sharp flames at his of amethyst,
Go and be forgot as death forgets,
Their glitter hissed, so seemed it in their hate."

The People's Forum will appear daily in the Evening Public Ledger, and also in the Sunday Public Ledger. Letters discussing timely topics will be printed, as well as requested poems, and questions of general interest will be answered.

TARZAN THE TERRIBLE

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

Author of the "Tarzan" Stories and the "Martian" Stories

CHAPTER XXV

Home

Within an hour of the fall of Lu-don and Mo-sar, the chiefs and principal warriors of Pal-ul-don gathered in the great throne-room of the palace at A-lur upon the steps of the lofty pyramid and placing Ja-don at the apex proclaimed him king. Upon one side of the old chieftain stood Tarzan of the Apes, and upon the other Korak the Killer, worthy son of the mighty apeman.

And when the brief ceremony was over and the warriors with upraised clubs had sworn fealty to their new ruler, Ja-don dispatched a trusted company to fetch O-lo-a and Pan-at-lee and the women of his own household from Ja-lur.

And then the warriors discussed the future of Pal-ul-don and the question arose as to the administration of the temples and the fate of the priests, who practically without exception had been disloyal to the government of the king, seeking always only their own power and comfort and aggrandizement. And then it was that Ja-don turned to Tarzan. "Let the Dor-ul-Otho transmit to his people the wishes of his father," he said.

"Your problem is a simple one," said the ape-man, "if you but wish to do that which shall be pleasing in the eyes of god. Your priests, to increase their power, have taught you that Jad-ben-Otho is a cruel god; that his eyes love to dwell upon blood and upon suffering. But the falsity of their teachings has been demonstrated to you today in the utter defeat of the priesthood.

"Take then the temples from the men and give them instead to the women that they may be administered in kindness and charity and love. Wash the blood from your eastern altar and drain forever the water from the western.

"Once I gave Lu-don the opportunity to do these things, but he ignored my commands, and again is the corridor of sacrifice filled with its victims. Liberate these from every temple in Pal-ul-don. Bring offerings of such gifts as your people like and place them upon the altars of your god. And there he will bless them and the priestesses of Jad-ben-Otho can distribute them among those who need them most."

"And the priests," cried one. "We shall put them to death upon their own altars if it pleases the Dor-ul-Otho to give the word."

"No," cried Tarzan. "Let no more blood be spilled. Give them their freedom and the right to take up such occupations as they choose."

That night a great feast was spread in the pal-e-don-so and for the first time in the history of ancient Pal-ul-don black warriors sat in peace and friendship with white. And a pact was sealed between Ja-don and Om-at that would ever make his tribe and the Ho-don allies and friends.

It was here that Tarzan learned the cause of Ta-den's failure to attack at the stipulated time. A messenger had come from Ja-don carrying instructions to delay the attack until noon, nor had they discovered until almost too late that the messenger was a disguised priest of Lu-don.

The following day O-lo-a and Pan-at-lee and the women of Ja-don's family arrived at the palace at A-lur and in the great throneroom Ta-den and O-lo-a were wed, and Om-at and Pan-at-lee.

For a week Tarzan and Jane and Korak remained the guests of Ja-don, as did Om-at and his black warriors. And then the ape-man announced that he would depart from Pal-ul-don. Hazy in the minds of their hosts was the location of heaven and equally so the means by which the gods traveled between their celestial homes and the haunts of men and so no questionings arose when it was found that the Dor-ul-Otho with his mate and son would travel overland across the mountains and out of Pal-ul-don toward the north.

They went by way of the Kor-ul-ja accompanied by the warriors of that tribe and a great contingent of Ho-don warriors under Ta-den. The king and many warriors and a multitude of people accompanied them beyond the limits of A-lur and after they had bid good-by and Tarzan had invoked the blessings of God upon them the three Europeans saw their simple, loyal friends prostrate in the dust behind them until the cavalcade had wound out of the city and disappeared among the trees of the nearby forest.

They rested for a day among the Kor-ul-ja while Jane investigated the ancient caves of these strange people and then they moved on, avoiding the rugged shoulder of Pastar-ul-ved and winding down the opposite slope toward the great morass. They moved in comfort and in safety, surrounded by their escort of Ho-don and Waz-don.

In the minds of many there was doubtless a question as to how the three would cross the great morass, but least of all was Tarzan worried by the problem. In the course of his life he had been confronted by many obstacles, only to learn that he who will may always pass.

In his mind lurked an easy solution of the passage, but it was one which depended wholly upon chance.

It was the morning of the last day that, as they were breaking camp to take up the march, a deep bellow thundered from a nearby grove. The ape-man smiled. The chance had come. Fittingly then would the Dor-ul-Otho and his mate and their son depart from unmapped Pal-ul-don.

He still carried the spear that Jane had made, which he had prized so highly because it was her handiwork that he had caused a search to be made for it through the temple in A-lur after his release, and it had been found and brought to him. He had told her laughingly that it should have the place of honor above their hearth as the ancient flintlock of her Puritan grandsire had held a similar place of honor above the fireplace of Prof. Porter, her father.

At the sound of the bellowing the Ho-don warriors, some of whom had accompanied Tarzan from Ja-don's camp to Ja-lur, looked questioningly at the ape-man while Om-at's Waz-don looked for trees, since the gryf was the one creature of Pal-ul-don which might not be safely encountered even by a great multitude of warriors. Its tough, armored hide was impregnable to their knife thrusts while their thrown clubs rattled from it as futilely as if hurled at the rocky shoulder of Pastar-ul-ved.

"Wait," said the ape-man, and with his spear in hand he advanced toward the gryf, voicing the weird cry of the Tor-o-don. The bellowing ceased and turned to low rumblings and presently the huge beast appeared. What followed was but a repetition of the ape-man's previous experience with these huge and ferocious creatures.

And so it was that Jane and Korak and Tarzan rode through the morass that hems Pal-ul-don, upon the back of a prehistoric triceratops while the lesser reptiles of the swamp fled hissing in terror. Upon the opposite shore they turned and called back their farewells to Ta-den and Om-at and the brave warriors they had learned to admire and respect. And then Tarzan urged their titanic mount onward toward the North, abandoning him only when he was assured that the Waz-don and the Ho-don had had time to reach a point of comparative safety among the craggy ravines of the foothills.

Turning the beast's head again toward Pal-ul-don the three dismounted and a sharp blow upon the thick hide sent the creature lumbering majestically back in the direction of its native haunts. For a time they stood looking back upon the land they had just quit—the land of Tor-o-don and gryf; of ja and jato; of Waz-don and Ho-don; a primitive land of terror and sudden death and peace and beauty; a land that they all had learned to love.

And then they turned once more toward the North and with light hearts and brave hearts took up their long journey toward the land that is best of all—home.
