Everybody felt blue at Bryn Mawr

College today. home of the eighty-three girls who left their positions in various fields of in-dustry, eight weeks ago, to attend the unique summer school with which the college blazed an educational trail.

Informal commencement

Informal commencement exercises were held last night in the way of singing on the roof of the gymnasium with a dance following. But the exodus from the campus did not begin until Henry this morning. There were suitcases aplenty and

There were suitcases aplenty and promises to write, and once in a while there was a stray suspicion of moisture in bright blue or brown eyes. Here was the rub. These girls who today must return to their positions as telephone operators, laundresses, garment workers, waitresses and the like do not mind that. They are the type of girls that. They are the type of girls are honestly interested in their going a real sorrow.

And the members of the faculty and And the inemeers of the faculty and the tutors who watched the little groups of baggage-laden girls walk rather slowly down the bright green campus felt every bit as badly as the girls. Some of the girls have to go as far as California to get home. They represent nearly every State in the Union.

"There was genuine regret on all sides," said Mrs. Chadwick Collins, an alumnae member of the Joint Administrative Committee. "The girls were not dissatisfied to leave because they had to return to their positions, but it was just they hated to leave Bryn Mawr and every one hated to see then

The question that looms big in eduentional circles throughout the cational circles throughout the catro is whether the Bryn Mawr Sacr School for Working Girls, the fact of its kind in the country, will continue "This matter has not been finally decided." Mrs. Collins explained. "The previous way undoubtedly an unqualperiment was undoubtedly an unqualified success and every one feels it would be a distinct calamity if the girls of industry should not by circumstances be permitted to come back.

The question is more a financial one than anything else. At the present moment the outlook is bright and the general feeling is that the girls will be with us again next summer. The de-cision rests, however, with the Joint Administrative Board, composed of representatives of the women workers, of the alumnae and the college." In summing up the results of the eight weeks' course Mrs. Collins said:
"The question is so broad that it is Differences with certain members of his congregation have caused the Rev. Henry J. Belting, pastor of State Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Camden, to ask for his release from his vacation with his family at Asbury Park. He made known to his congregation that he had requested Bishop Berry and District Superintendent Corson to relieve him of the pastorate of the State Street Church,

For some time past it has been known that certain officials of the church objected to the pastor's appointments on certain committees. Mr. Belting, it is said, decided he wanted a change.
