University Watchman, Ignorant of Robbery, Catches Supposed I. Press & Sons Thief

MAN ON SOUTH ST. BRIDGE AROUSED HIS SUSPICIONS

Jewelry valued at $15,000 was stolen from I. Press & Sons, at 1017 Market street, shortly after midnight.

A few hours later all the plunder, wrapped in a towel with an outer wrapping of newspapers, was taken from a young Negro, John Brown, of Louisiina, when he was walking with it under his arm near South street bridge.

Brown told the police, and reiterated to Assistant Director Tempest and Police Commissioner Barelay Warburton, that he had dug the bundle from a hiding place near a pier under the bridge after he had watched two other

Negroes bury it. The loot was identified by members of the firm and returned to them. In an fort to prove that Brown stole the his finger prints were taken, jewelry, his finger prints were taken, and Police Photographer Bodkin was nt to the jewelry store to look for finger prints left on the show cases

The speed with which the jewelry was recovered was a remarkable feature of the robbery. The credit goes to watchman employed at the University of Pennsylvania.

Shortly after 8 o'clock this morning the milkman saw young Brown walking near a pier alongside South Street Bridge, on the West Philadelphia side of the river, with a bundle under his From the bundle dangled what arm. From the bulble a pearl
