Women's New Coats Are Softer and More Luxurious Than Ever

There are three excellent reasons for buying a new coat this season.

First: the coats themselves. They are so soft, so warm, so light in weight and so beautiful. Materials have a velvety texture that is wonderfully alluring and combines most successfully with fur. Some wraps show deep cape collars of mole, sable-dyed squirrel, black fox or raccoon.

Second: the prices, which are noticeably lower than they have been in years.

Third: many weather-prophets are predicting a very cold winter.

Here are the coats—and they are fine. The one which is sketched is of velour with a cape collar and band cuffs of beaverette (dyed coney). It is in navy and brown at $42.50.

A long black broadcloth coat, lined throughout with satin, is $35. $42.50

A beautiful coat of black Bolivia is $45.

Camel's-hair coats, full length and lined with peau de cygne, are in the natural tan at $43.50; in Havana brown at $47.50.

Velour coats, in navy and brown, lined throughout with silk and topped with wide collars of raccoon, are $49.

A luxurious wrap with a deep mole collar is $75. One, with revers of mole reaching to the hem, is $97.50.

$10,000 COFFIN ON WAY TO ITALY

Princess De Braganza Sails With Husband's Bronze Casket Made at Boyertown WEIGHS HALF A TON

The most costly coffin ever shipped from the United States was on board the Italian steamer Taormina, which sailed yesterday for Naples. With it was the purchaser, Princess De Braganza and Duchess of Oporto. She bought it in Boyertown for her late husband, who was next in succession to King Manuel, of Portugal.

The princess arrived here incognito six weeks ago aboard the Aquilina to arrange for the delivery of the casket which will hold the body of her husband in its final resting place in the Pantheon at Lisbon.

Departing yesterday without the slightest vestige of show or formality, she was next in line to her husband, who went immediately to her stateroom.

The casket, in a packing case as large as an ordinary automobile crate, was the last thing taken aboard the Taormina just before the boat left her pier at West Fifty-seventh street, New York city.

"I am taking the casket with me to Naples," the princess said, "and on October 21, my birthday, the body of my husband will be taken on board an Italian warship to Lisbon."

The casket weighs a half ton, is made of bronze coated with silver and bears a reproduction of the royal crown of Portugal in silver. It was made at Boyertown, Pa., and is said to have cost about $10,000.

The Princess De Braganza died in February, 1920, while en route in Italy. She resided at the Royal Palace at Naples. Ceremonies attending removal of the body to the Pantheon will be religious and grand and will be attended by members of the old Portuguese court.

Left $339,110 Estate

Wills were admitted to probate in the estates of Ellen Daly, who died in Atlantic City recently, $5500, and Catherine Morton, 1046 North Dover street, $10,100.
